Harlan was compelled to resign. By the sudden death of his father he was imperatively summoned to return to civil life. This was a severe loss to the army, for he had proven himself a most energetic and able officer. Could it have been possible for him to have continued in the service, there can be no doubt he would have attained high rank as a commander. He displayed admirable promptness and vigor as a regimental and brigade commander. His rapid movement from Tennessee against Morgan, who was on the railroad, and the effective manner in which he rushed his infantry regiments up to the attack at Rolling Fork, shows military qualities of the genuine type.

The following extract from his letter of resignation shows the patriotic fire which animated him from the first, and which has always been characteristic:

> I deeply regret that I am compelled, at this time, to return to civil life. It was my fixed purpose to remain in the Federal army until it had effectually suppressed the existing armed rebellion, and restored the authority of the national government over every part of the nation. No ordinary considerations would have induced me to depart from this purpose. Even the private interests, to which I have alluded, would be regarded as nothing, in my estimation, if I felt that my continuance in, or retirement from, the service would, to any material extent, affect the great struggle through which the country is now passing.
> If, therefore, I am permitted to retire from the army, I beg the commanding general to feel assured that it is from no want of confidence either in the justice or ultimate triumph of the Union cause. That cause will always have the warmest sympathies of my heart, for there are no conditions upon which I will consent to a dissolution of the Union. Nor are there any conditions, consistent with a republican form of government, which I am not prepared to make in order to maintain and perpetuate that Union.

In 1863 he was nominated by the Union men of Kentucky and elected, by a large majority, attorney-general of Kentucky. After the expiration of his term of office he returned to Louisville. In subsequent years he was twice the Republican candidate for governor, and in 1877, was appointed justice of the Supreme Court of the United States.

After the resignation of Col. Harlan, Lieut. Col. William H. Hays was promoted colonel of the 10th, and remained in command until it was mustered out of the service.

The regiment was with Rosecrans' army in the campaign from Murfreesboro during the summer of 1863, participating in the actions at Hoover's Gap, Fairfield, Tullahoma, Compton's creek, and, in September, in the great battle of Chickamauga.

During the summer it was in the 2d Brigade, 3d Division, 14th Army Corps. In the battle of Chickamauga, the 2d Brigade was commanded by Col. Croxton of the 4th Ky., who was wounded, and Col. Chapman, of the 74th Ind., made the report of the service of the brigade. Col. Hays commanded the 10th and made the report, though during the engagement he took charge of the brigade, and Lieut. Col. G. C. Warton led the 10th and also made report.

A detailed account of the terrible scenes of the battle can not be given. The 10th fought under the command of Gen. Thomas and the well-known service of the troops unde him shows that the 10th Ky. was a portion of that body of men which stood with the "Rock of Chickamauga." The loss of the regiment attests its gallantry; the official return of casualties shows that it lost one officer killed, Capt. Bevill, twenty men killed, nine officers wounded, and one hundred and twenty-five men wounded, one officer and ten men captured, making a total loss of one hundred and sixty-six.

Col. Wharton says, in his report of the battle of the 20th:

> It seemed two or three times it would be impossible to hold our position, so overwhelming was the force of the enemy, but our troops, being partially screened by rails, poured volley after volley into their masses, so well aimed that after three hours of most desperate fighting the enemy withdrew just as our ammunition was exhausted, and Gen. Brannan (commanding the division) had ordered the men to fix their bayonets and receive the enemy on their points if they again advanced. During the whole fight the men never wavered nor gave an inch, and the officers of my regiment were all at their posts encouraging their men.

The night of the 20th the 10th withdrew from the position it had held during the battle, and marched to Rossville, reaching there at midnight, where it rested.

After the battle of Chickamauga the 10th remained with the army at Chattanooga, and bore its part in the actions which occurred November 23d, 24th and 25th, culminating in the final charge upon and the capture of Mission Ridge. During this battle Col. Hays commanded the 10th, but the brigade commander fell, and Col. Hays took his place, then the 10th being led by Lieut. Col. G. C. Wharton. This officer, in his report, says that on November 2d the 10th moved forward with the brigade to the right of Fort Negley, then advanced to a point fronting the Rossville road, where it bivouacked. The next day it moved to a line parallel with Mission Ridge, in full view of the enemy's pickets. That position was maintained until eleven o'clock the next day, the 25th. At that hour moved by the left flank along the entire line, crossed Citico creek at its mouth, thence up the bank of the river two and a half miles to the position held by Gen. Sherman.

Then countermarched to an open field between Citico creek and Mission Ridge. Two companies under Capts. Hill and McKay were advanced as skirmishers. The enemy was in full view. The order was to storm their rifle-pits, but before the bugle sounded the skirmishers had taken them; then the brigade rushed forward for the final assault. The troops rested about ten minutes in the captured rifle-pits under a furious cannon fire. "The officers and men became wild with enthusiasm and desire to advance."

"When the bugle sounded, and Col. Hays gave the command forward, one wild yell went up and forward they swept over an open plain through the camp of the enemy, and gained the foot of the ridge under a terrible enfilading fire of artillery from Tunnell Hill, knocking down the huts of the enemy's camp, and tearing up the ground in every direction, but the men never wavered or faltered. When the foot of the hill had been gained and ascent commenced, the line of battle was lost. The strongest men got the right of the regiment and went first and the weaker men formed the left. Many fell going up the hill as if exhausted, but would rest a moment and then forward again. Having reached the top of the ridge and driven the enemy from their first line of works toward Tunnell Hill, Col. Hays formed the regiment on the left of the 2d Brigade, 3d Division, and advanced with this brigade about one hundred and fifty yards, when the enemy were again discovered in force and making another stand."

The fight here lasted about twenty minutes, and the enemy gave way, broke and fled precipitately. The 10th bivouacked on the field. The next day advanced with the pursuit to West Chickamauga Creek, a distance of eight miles; the next day, the 27th, reached Ringgold; on the 28th aided in destroying the railroad and bridges. On the 29th marched back to the camp at Chattanooga.

The 10th remained with the army at Chattanooga during the winter. In February it advanced with the troops under Gen. Thomas and fought at Rocky Face February 25th. In the spring prepared for the Atlanta campaign. In the organization, May 3, 1864, it was brigaded with the 10th and 74th Ind. and 18th Ky., 3d Brigade, 3d Division, 14th Army Corps. It was stationed at Ringgold, which was then the outpost of the army, where it was until May 10th, when it started on the Atlanta campaign, taking part in all the movements and engagements of that eventful summer, moving all the time with the troops under Gen. Thomas. Space does not permit a detailed account of this celebrated campaign. From Tunnell Hill to the capture of Atlanta, through the months of May, June, July and August, there was a continuous series of fights in the rough country of Northern Georgia, at Resaca, Adairville, Calhoun, Kingston, Kennesaw, the Chattahoochee, Peach Tree Creek, Utoy, Atlanta, Jonesboro, and many other points. On the 9th of July the regiment had a notable and severe experience on the north bank of the Chattahoochee, where it successfully resisted the advance of an entire brigade until reinforcements arrived. It is especially mentioned in the report of the division commander, Gen. Baird. In the battle at Jonesboro, September 1st, the 3d Brigade under its commander, Col. Este, made a charge which Gen. Baird says "was one of the most magnificent on record," capturing the works and a number of prisoners. Col. Hays, in his report, specially compliments Capt. Davenport who was wounded, and Lieuts. Kelly and Adcock, both severely wounded. Col. Hays also mentions the color bearer, Corp. Orville B. Young, who "ran forward with the flag calling on his comrades to rally to it. It was the first flag planted on the enemy's works."

After the fall of Atlanta, the 10th was sent on detached duty to Ringgold, Ga. It was there September 30th. From thence it proceeded to Chattanooga, where it was stationed in October.

Some of the men had re-enlisted in the veteran organization; with the exception of these and the recruits the regiment was mustered out of the service December 6, 1864, at Louisville.

Concerning the veterans and recruits, the following letter from Col. G. C. Wharton, which is copied from the adjutant-general's report, gives some information:

"The veterans and recruits of the 10th Ky. Infantry were never properly assigned to any regiment after the discharge of the 10th. The descriptive rolls of these men were left with some officer at Chattanooga, who was careless enough to lose them. They were organized under a non-commissioned officer, and sent down on the road between Chattanooga and Atlanta to guard some post, and when Gen. Sherman cut the road and started on his march to the sea, they were left without orders or officers; some of them marched after Sherman and served under the old division commander, Gen. Baird, through that campaign; others came up and joined Gen. Thomas at Nashville, and fought through the war somewhat 'on their own account.' I have had much difficulty in having these men discharged and paid off because of the loss of their descriptive rolls.

for which they were not responsible. I am not sure as yet all these men have been discharged and paid. They were generally excellent soldiers, and have suffered grievous wrongs at the hands of their commanders.

The statement of Col. Wharton that they went through to the sea with Sherman, is confirmed by the report of operations of the 3d Division, 14th Army Corps, which shows that the 10th Ky. was encamped near Washington city with the division, June 1, 1865, about which time they were mustered out of the service.

Subsequent to the war, Col. Hays was appointed judge of the United States District Court, in Kentucky, and soon afterward died.

Col. G. C. Wharton was for a series of years United States Attorney for Kentucky.

Eleventh Kentucky Infantry.

This regiment was recruited in the fall of 1861 by Col. Pierce Butler Hawkins, of Bowling Green. The companies were formed in the Green river counties, Muhlenberg, Butler, Warren, Edmonson, and went in camp at Calhoun, where were assembled at the same time several other Kentucky regiments. The Confederates were then in Kentucky, at Bowling Green, Russellville, Hopkinsville and other places, and the Union regiments encamped at Calhoun and Owensboro prevented their advance to the Ohio river. Skirmishing and picket fighting was carried on during December and January, but in February, 1862, upon the fall of Fort Donelson the Confederates retired, and the Federals at once advanced into Tennessee. The 11th marched from its camp at Calhoun to Owensboro, and from thence went by boat to Nashville. At Nashville the 11th was assigned to W. S. Smith's brigade, Gen. Crittenden's division. It marched with Buell's army to Pittsburg Landing. Crossing the river the night of April 6th, it was in line at 5 o'clock a. m., the 7th. Smith's brigade was the left of Crittenden's division, and the 11th Ky. was at first used as reserve. Gen. Crittenden says in his report, his command was exposed to heavy fire, that Col. W. S. Smith, commanding the 14th Brigade "brought his command well into the fight and was eminent for his service throughout the day." Col. Smith of the 13th Ohio, commanding the 14th Brigade says, "the 13th Ohio and 11th and 26th Ky. seemed to vie with each other in determined valor."

Col. P. B. Hawkins, in personal command of the 11th Ky., in his report makes a very interesting mention of the battle. He says: "Being ordered forward in line of battle there not being space sufficient between Bartlett's battery on my right, and the 14th Wis. on my left, we became entangled with them, still pressing forward in that condition engaging the enemy, who were drawn up in considerable numbers in the brush and playing upon us from their batteries, from some cause or other we were compelled to fall back to the original line of battle. I then by your order charged the enemy, and succeeded in driving him, found and captured one piece of artillery, but was unable to hold it on account of the overwhelming number of the enemy brought to its support. We, therefore, had to fall back a second time. I was then the third time ordered to charge this gun, which my men did in gallant style, and succeeded in capturing and holding it until the engagement ceased."

This statement shows the courage of the men, which seemed to rise with the danger, in the first battle they were in, and it continued to be displayed by them throughout their service. Col. Hawkins specially mentions for gallantry, Lieut. Col. S. P. Love and Maj. E. H. Mottley, officers who showed the same gallantry in many a future battle. The casualties were five killed and forty-six wounded.

In a letter to the writer, Col. S. P. Love, now a practicing lawyer at Greenville, Ky., who was in command of the regiment a long time, says the 11th "remained several days on the battlefield and then advanced to Corinth, Miss., reaching Farmington about two miles from that place, and being daily on the skirmish line, until the evacuation, some days afterward. Gen. Buell in command, we left our camp at Farmington and marched via Iuka, Miss., Tuscumbia, Florence, Ala. (crossing the Tennessee at the old Jackson crossing), to Athens, Huntsville and Stevenson to Battle Creek, where we remained until Bragg flanked us and started on his march to Kentucky. We followed him, crossing the mountains and by way of Murfreesboro, Nashville and Bowling Green to Louisville. Thence on by Bardstown and Springfield to Perryville, in which battle my regiment took part (skirmishing), and continued in pursuit of Bragg, by Danville, Lancaster, Stanford, Crab Orchard, Mt. Vernon to Camp Wild Cat, when the pursuit was ended. Then by way of Somerset, Columbia and Glasgow, to Nashville; thence to Murfreesboro, fighting at Stone's River." The 11th was then in Beatty's brigade, Van Cleve's division, Crittenden's corps. Two reports of the battle were made by Maj. E. L. Mottley, who commanded the regiment at that time; one of the engagement of December 31st, the other the engagement of January 2d. In the first he describes the 11th being ordered by Gen. Rosecrans to hold the thicket "at all hazards," and Col. Mottley simply says, "we did so." The regiment was then ordered to support two batteries, "Terrill's regulars and the Chicago Board of Trade battery, where we remained the remainder of the day, my entire regiment, both officers and men, doing their whole duty."

Of the battle of January 2d, Maj. Mottley says: "I ordered my regiment forward under the most terrific storm of shot and shell and musketry it has ever been my lot to witness. I advanced about one hundred yards when I ordered a halt and commenced firing. I broke their ranks more than once. Their colors were shot down several times, but their broken ranks were speedily filled with fresh troops." The position being flanked, Maj. Mottley withdrew and crossed the river; after crossing, the 11th with other regiments of the brigade "succeeded in putting the enemy to flight, capturing four pieces of the celebrated Washington Artillery." The casualties were seven killed and eighty-five wounded, including four officers.

Col. Beatty commanding the brigade described the fighting on January 2d, and says: "The reserve, consisting of the 19th Ohio and 9th and 11th Ky., advanced most gallantly toward the crest of the hill and poured a destructive fire upon the enemy, whose first column was by this time almost annihilated." The position, however, being flanked, he took his men across the river, and then recrossed and drove back the enemy.

After the battle of Stone's River, Gen. Rosecrans, on the 29th of January, 1863, says in a communication to Gen. H. G. Wright: "I propose to send up the 9th and 11th Ky. to Bowling Green (two first rate fighting regiments raised in that neighborhood), to replenish their thinned ranks." The 11th then returned to Bowling Green, where it remained from February to July. On the 25th of June, 1863, Col. Hawkins resigned and Lieut. Col. S. P. Love was commissioned colonel in his stead. While at Bowling Green the 11th, under Lieut. Col. S. P. Love, was mounted and employed in pursuing bands of the enemy, who were infesting that section. On the 2d of May, Col. Love with his regiment and a portion of the 8th Ky. Cavalry made an excursion by way of Scottsville, capturing a number of guerrillas and clearing the country of them. From July to August, the 11th was in Judah's division, and a portion of the time was encamped at Glasgow; in September it was at Glasgow preparing to move with Burnside's force to East Tennessee. In that campaign, being mounted, it operated with the cavalry.

Of that campaign, Col. Love says: "From Bowling Green, with other troops under command of Gen. Manson, we took up the line of march by way of Burksville, Ky., for Knoxville, where we became a part of Gen. Burnside's army, making frequent scouts toward and beyond Loudon and Sevierville, fighting a battle at Rockford, across the river, in which we were victorious; made several scouts up the railroad to Lenoir Station, Philadelphia, Sweetwater, continually on the lookout until Longstreet approached Knoxville; fighting him at Lenoir and Campbell Stations. When Burnside's army was driven into Knoxville my regiment was the last one in."

The 11th endured the hardships of the siege of twenty-one days, participating in numerous fights around the lines, in which loss was incurred; when the siege was raised the 11th with the other forces pursued Longstreet up the valley to Bean's Station; from that place the 11th was sent on several scouts and engaged in the battle at Bean's Station, when Longstreet turned upon his pursuers and gave them a hard fight, attempting to capture them not only failed, but suffered more loss than he inflicted.

From Bean's Station the 11th moved to Blain's Cross-roads, and from thence reported to Gen. T. T. Garrard, at Cumberland Gap. From thence (Col. Love being in com mand of his own regiment and the 27th Ky. Infantry), the march was to Kentucky in the midst of the winter; meeting on the way trains of provisions going to East Tennessee, from which Col. Love supplied his command. Upon reaching Mt. Sterling, the 11th was dismounted and ordered back to East Tennessee, marching by way of Lexington, Lancaster, Stanford, Somerset, Point Burnside, and Chitwood to Knoxville; Col. Love says:

"I remained there until I was ordered to the crossing of the Hiawasee, where there were two block houses to guard the bridge. I had a brigade of three regiments and a battery, and continually received messages from Gen. Sherman to be vigilant against Wheeler's efforts to cut his communications. I remained there until Gen. Sherman had taken position around Marietta; I then proceeded by rail to join his army, via Cleveland and Dalton. A short distance below Kingston joined the main army, participated in the fighting around Kennesaw; thence through Marietta to the siege of Atlanta taking part in the battle in which Gen. McPherson was killed; flanking with Sherman's army, struck the railroad at Rough and Ready; fought at Jonesboro and Lovejoy."

In the reports of the Atlanta campaign, the 11th and its officers, particularly Col. Love and Lieut. Col. Mottley, are frequently mentioned. At the crossing of the Chattahoochee river by the 23d Army Corps, July 8th, which Sherman declared to be "one of the brilliant feats in the annals of war" the 12th Ky. and 11th Ky. took a leading part. The 12th under Lieut. Col. Rousseau first crossed in pontoon boats and was promptly followed by the 11th under Col. Love; Col. Byrd, who commanded the brigade, says in his report: "Colonels Rousseau and Love behaved with the greatest gallantry as well as the officers and men under their command and performed their whole duty."

After the capture of Atlanta the 11th encamped at Decatur, Ga., until Gen. Hood made his northward move. The 11th then joined in the pursuit of Hood, marching from point to point, in Northern Georgia, during the entire month of October, 1864. It was at that time the 1st Brigade (Col. Love commanding), and Maj. W. H. Houchin commanding the regiment, 3d Division, 23d Army Corps.

When Gen. Sherman in November started on his march to the sea the 23d Corps and 4th Corps were ordered from Georgia to Nashville to serve under Gen. Thomas against Hood's army. The 11th, therefore, proceeded with the 25th Corps to Nashville and from that place to Pulaski, Tenn. On the 14th of November, 1864, while in camp at Pulaski, and before Hood entered upon his movement into Tennessee, the 11th, 20th and 27th Ky. Infantry received orders from Gen. Schofield to proceed to Kentucky. They went by rail to Louisville and from Louisville the 11th returned to Bowling Green and on the 16th of December was mustered out of service. Col. Love being in command of the post, at Bowling Green, was mustered out a month later.

The surgeon of the 11th, Dr. J. F. Kimbley, deserves special mention for faithful and continuous services during the war. On the fields of Shiloh, Perryville, Stone's River; in the East Tennessee campaign and siege of Knoxville, and in the Atlanta campaign he was present to succor the wounded and dying. He shared all the hardships and exposures of marching and campaigning not only with his regiment, but as brigade, division and corps surgeon, being on duty with each one of the three armies —the Cumberland, Tennessee and Ohio. For his fidelity and efficiency he received complimentary mention from the commanders of these armies. Since the war Dr. Kimbley has been a practicing physician and surgeon at Owensboro, Ky. In 1896 he was appointed Surgeon-General of Kentucky, with the rank of colonel on the staff of the governor. He died at Owensboro, May, 1897.

Twelfth Kentucky Infantry.

In September, 1861, the organization of the 12th Ky. Volunteer Infantry was commenced. Company A under Capt. C. C. Ham, and 1st Lieut. E. F. Hays and 2d Lieut. Samuel Tomlinson, was mustered into service by Gen. Geo. H. Thomas at Camp Dick Robinson. A short time after this it moved to the Cumberland river, near Waitsboro, Pulaski county, where the other companies which had been recruited in the counties of Pulaski, Wayne, Clinton, Russell and Cumberland assembled, and formally organized the regiment in October, 1861. Col. Wm. A. Hoskins was the leader under whose call the companies were recruited, and the first camp of the regiment was on the Cumberland river, and was called Camp Hoskins. He was an officer of fine appearance and soldierly qualities. His regiment became devotedly attached to him and he made it conspicuous for its good discipline and efficiency.

The first movement of the regiment was early in November, 1861. It was sent with the 3d Ky. Infantry, under Col. Bramlette, upon an expedition into the counties of Wayne and Clinton, south of the Cumberland river. Very soon afterward the 12th was dispatched to Mill Spring to protect that section from marauding bands which claimed to belong to Zollicoffer's command. The object being accomplished, the regiment returned to its camp. Twice on its way it was drawn up in line of battle to defend itself against the advance of Zollicoffer's troops, who were in hot pursuit, they having been at Monticello, eight miles distant, while the 12th was at Mill Spring.

On the 2d of December, 1861, Zollicoffer appeared on the south bank of the Cumberland, opposite Camp Hoskins, and began throwing shells over the river into the camp. To this the 12th promptly responded with its own battery, which was a little howitzer presented to the regiment by Gen. Nelson. It was mounted on two wheels and was drawn by the men. The gun was a great pet with the men. They carried it with them until the regiment reached Nashville, in the spring of 1862; there it was turned in and was placed on the ramparts of the capitol. The shelling caused the abandonment of Camp Hoskins. The 12th fell back about three miles, where it met a force under command of Gen. Schoepf. In a short time all these troops made a night march to Somerset, where others were encamped, all under command of Gen. Thomas. There the 12th remained until about the middle of January, when movements began which resulted in the battle of Mill Spring.

In January, 1862, the Confederate forces under Generals Crittenden and Zollicoffer, occupied an entrenched camp on the north bank of the Cumberland river, not far from Mill Spring. Early Sunday morning, January 19th, the long roll was sounded. The 10th Ind. went forward, then Gen. S. S. Fry's 4th Ky. and 2d Minn. The battle was at Logan's Crossroads. The 12th came upon the field in the midst of the engagement. It opened fire, and as it charged forward across an open space the enemy gave way. The 12th is mentioned twice in Gen. Thomas' official report, once as follows:

"At this time the 12th Ky. (Col. W. A. Hoskins) and the Tennessee brigade reached the field to the left of the Minnesota regiment and opened fire on the right flank of the enemy, who then began to fall back. The 2d Minn. kept up a most galling fire in front, and the 9th Ohio charged the enemy on the right with bayonets fixed, turned their flank and drove them from the field, the whole line giving way and retreating in the utmost disorder and confusion."

Up to this time the 12th had not been mustered into the United States service. It was organized at the front in the very field of action, and the exigencies of the hour did not give opportunity for that formality. After the battle of Mill Spring it marched south of the Cumberland to the little village of Clio, where it went into camp. There it was regularly mustered into the service of the United States. In this service it remained until peace came in 1865.

After the fall of Fort Donelson, the 12th, with other regiments under Gen. Thomas, marched from Somerset through Danville, Lebanon, and Bardstown to Louisville.

From thence they proceeded down the Ohio and up the Cumberland to Nashville, reaching there about the middle of March, 1862. A week later the 12th took up the line of march southwardly, with the army of Gen. Buell, in the first brigade of Gen. Thomas' division, being the advance troops of Buell's army. On Sunday, April 6, 1862, the battle of Shiloh was fought. On that day the 12th was on the way from Columbia, Tenn., in charge of the trains of Buell's army.

It arrived at Pittsburg Landing April 9th, passing over the battle ground, it went on to Corinth and performed its full share of service on the picket and skirmish lines. In one of these skirmishes it captured a beautiful Confederate flag.

On the 29th of May Corinth was evacuated by the Confederates under Beauregard. On the 10th of June Halleck dispatched Buell's army toward Chattanooga; Bragg, however, who had superseded Beauregard, finding Buell moving in the direction of Chattanooga, determined to go there himself. The 12th Ky. shared the fortunes of Buell's army through the memorable summer of 1862. From Corinth it marched to Boonville, Miss., thence to Tuscumbia, Ala., where it remained until July 10th. It then entered upon the great march which was prolonged from week to week until the army reached Louisville, a distance of more than three hundred miles. From Tuscumbia the march was to Winchester, Tenn., thence to Decherd. At Decherd the 12th made a night reconnoissance to the town of Altamont, about fifteen miles distant. There it obtained information that Bragg's army was bivouacked not more than three miles away. The regiment returned rapidly to Decherd, and with the other forces marched at once northwardly through Tullahoma, Shelbyville and Murfreesboro to Nashville. These forced marches are remembered as the hardest the regiment ever made.

From Nashville to Bowling Green, thence through Munfordville and Elizabethtown until Louisville was reached September 25th. There it rested a few days and then moved in pursuit of Bragg.

On the battlefield at Perryville the 12th moved to different points with reserves; but though constantly in hearing of the artillery and musketry, it was not brought into the engagement. Bragg having retreated from Kentucky, Buell took his army again to Nashville, where it was placed in command of Gen. Rosecrans. The 12th was, however, halted at Lebanon, Ky., where it spent the winter. From Lebanon the 12th made several reconnoissance where danger was apprehended, and once made a forced march to Hall's Gap, marching with cavalry in pursuit of the Confederate general, Pegram. On the 10th of April, 1863, the 12th marched to Bowling Green. At this time the regiment numbered seven hundred. It there spent several weeks on post duty. It was then ordered to Russellville. While stationed at Russellville, Gen. John Morgan, with a force of cavalry, appeared on the south bank of the Cumberland river near Burksville, Ky. In order to intercept his movements, Gen. Shackelford, with several regiments of cavalry and the 12th Infantry and a battery of artillery, went from Russellville, through Bowling Green and Glasgow, toward Burksville. It marched to Lebanon and then returned through Glasgow and Bowling Green to Russellville. In the spring of 1863 Gen. Burnside had been assigned to the command of the Department of the Ohio. He gathered during the summer a force of twenty thousand at Camp Nelson. The 12th was ordered to join this force in August, 1863.

From Russellville the regiment went by rail to Louisville and Nicholasville. It then marched to Camp Nelson, and in a few days to Danville, where it was assigned to the 1st Brigade, 3d Division, 23d Army Corps. On the 16th of August Burnside took up his march for East Tennessee. The march was over the present route of the Cincinnati Southern railroad. When near the highest point of the mountains eight days' rations were distributed, and a rapid advance upon Knoxville commenced. Passing the state line the march was through Huntsville, Wartburg, Kingston and Loudon. At Loudon there was a railroad bridge two thousand feet long. As the enemy retired it was burned. Knoxville was reached September 3d.

The 12th remained only a day or two at Knoxville. It passed on up the valley to the border of Virginia. At Watauga river it came up with the enemy; a sharp fight occurred and daily skirmishing. At Blue Springs the 12th was again engaged and suffered loss. Above Greenville the opposing force met in the valley and mutually defied each other. From this field the Federals fell back to Bull's Gap. From thence they hastened by forced marches to Knoxville, where a more powerful enemy was to be encountered, viz.: Longstreet's corps, from Bragg's army at Chattanooga. With the utmost expedition Gen. Burnside concentrated his forces in Knoxville. The place had no defensive works, and fortifications were thrown up as the troops came in and took position. The 12th was posted on Temperance Hill. Burnside had a force of about fifteen thousand. Longstreet came up very boldly, the cavalry and mounted infantry contesting his approach in a severe battle, in which Gen. Sanders fell. Fighting then began all around the lines, and on both sides of the river, until December 4th. Rations had become scarce. The troops suffered from cold and hunger.

On the 25th of November Gen. Grant won the great battle of Mission Ridge. Sherman had marched from the Mississippi river to take part in that battle, without halting. His troops went into the assault on Bragg's lines, and as soon as the victory was complete, Sherman hastened on to the relief of Knoxville. At Sherman's approach Longstreet raised the siege, and moved up the valley toward Virginia.

The 12th with other infantry followed the cavalry in pursuit. The cavalry and mounted infantry fought a sharp battle at Bean's Station. Winter came on and the 12th went into camp at Strawberry Plains. There the veteran organization was made during the intensely cold spell in the first days of January, 1864. The proposition of re-enlistment as veterans being made to the 12th, to ascertain who would re-enlist, the regiment was drawn up in line, the colors moved ten paces to the front, and those who would become veterans were invited to step forward and form on the colors. Sergt. Thos. Davidson, of Company D, was the first man to respond. For this he was made a lieutenant. Scattering men from all the companies then stepped forward, and in a moment more nearly the entire regiment rushed to the new line.

A few days after this the regiment recrossed the mountains. It was a dreary winter march with worn-out shoes and without overcoats. From Nicholasville to Louisville the travel was by rail. At Louisville the regiment was mustered out of the old service and into the veteran organization.

The men were granted a furlough of thirty days. They left for their homes the last day of February, 1864. The day fixed for the rendezvous was April 1st. The place was Point Burnside, on Cumberland river, ten miles from Somerset. At this time Col. Hoskins resigned. He had been with the regiment continuously from its organization. Every man in the regiment was personally attached to him. The day he was to leave, the regiment was formed on the parade ground. Col. Hoskins addressed them a few words of farewell which brought tears to every eye. Lieut. Col. Lawrence H. Rousseau took command, and retained it until the close of the war. He was a gallant officer, always present with his men, and he faithfully led the regiment through many dangerous and bloody encounters.

The 1st of May, 1864, the 12th received orders at Burnside Point to proceed at once to Chattanooga. It marched through Somerset, Stanford, Crab Orchard, and Danville to Lebanon; from Lebanon it went by rail, being transported from Nashville to Chattanooga on the top of the cars of a freight train. When the 12th arrived at Chattanooga Gen. Sherman's army had reached Kingston. The regiment, therefore, went on to that place by rail, and from thence it marched toward the front. The first night out, it reached "Burnt Hickory" and went into camp; about midnight it was attacked; one man was killed and several wounded by the fire.

The next day the regiment united with Sherman's great army at Pumpkin Vine creek, and was assigned to the 3d Brigade, 3d Division, 23d Army Corps. Gen. Schofield commanded the corps, Gen. J. D. Cox the division, and Gen. McLean the brigade.

It participated in the continuous fighting of this campaign. Reaching the Chattahoochee river the 23d Corps moved rapidly up to the mouth of Soap creek. There a crossing was to be made. The enemy held the opposite bank of the Chattahoochee, and had fortified the heights. The 3d Division of the 23d Corps (Gen. Cox), was selected to effect the crossing. The 3d Brigade of the division commanded by Col. Byrd, went forward, and the 12th was selected as the regiment to lead the crossing. In the mouth of Soap creek, under cover of the woods, the engineers put together the canvas pontoon boats. Into these the 12th was loaded and while the corps opened and kept up a terrific fire upon the opposite heights, the pontoon boats, loaded with the 12th, quickly crossed. Forming on the bank as they waded out, they rushed up the hill and captured the line of works with a section of artillery. Three men of Company A—Chas. Miller, Jas. Vaught, and Jas. Carter—were the first to seize the artillery, and turned it and fired it upon the enemy. Their names are mentioned in Gen. Cox's official report. The 12th then advanced with the 23d Corps and participated in the battle at Peach Tree creek where it suffered serious loss. In the engagement of August 6th it again suffered, and Capt. Geo. W. Hill was killed. It would be too tedious to mention in detail these well-known great battles. The 12th moved with the other forces on the grand wheel Sherman made to get upon the railroad, south of Atlanta. It took part in the fight at Utoy creek and assisted to tear up the railroad at Rough and Ready. It suffered severe loss in the fight at Jonesboro.

After the capture of Atlanta the 12th went into camp at Decatur, about ten miles east of Atlanta. The inspector-general on the staff of Gen. Sherman made a report, a copy of which was sent to the 12th, in which the 12th was reported to have the best arranged and cleanest camp of any regiment in the army.

On the 1st of October, 1864, Hood crossed the Chattahoochee river, about forty miles west of Atlanta, with forty thousand men.

As soon as Hood's move became known, Sherman started in a pursuit which lasted during the entire month of October.

About November 1, 1864, the 4th and 23d Corps proceeded by rail to Nashville, to be thenceforward under command of Gen. Thomas, while Sherman, with the remainder of his army, returned to Atlanta and took up his march to the sea.

From Nashville the two corps went partly by rail and partly by marching to Pulaski, and were under the immediate command of Gen. Schofield. The whole force at Pulaski was 22,000.

The troops remained quietly encamped at Pulaski until the 23d of November. It was then ascertained that Gen. Hood, with his veteran army, was moving northwardly and was advancing on Columbia by way of Lawrenceburg. Schofield, therefore, moved rapidly to Columbia. Had he been a little later Hood would have occupied Columbia and been squarely in his rear, and upon the line of his communications.

The position at Columbia was held a day or two and then Schofield crossed to the north bank of Duck river, and so posted his troops as to prevent the enemy crossing the river.

That night the entire regiment with the 16th Ky. and some other troops, all under command of Col. Rousseau, took position to guard the crossing during the coming day. The detachment held the crossing all day, November 29th, though under tremendous fire of grape and shells and musketry. On this day, November 29th, the 12th lost seventy-five men killed and wounded. Of thirteen officers on the field, seven were wounded—Capt. McClure and Lieutenants Davidson and Orman severely. At midnight it withdrew and marched rapidly through Spring Hill to Franklin.

As Col. Rousseau with his little detachment approached Franklin, about noon, November 30th, Gen.

Cox greeted him warmly, saying: "I did not expect to see you and your men any more."

The breastworks at Franklin were built the day the troops reached there, November 30th. The 23d Corps was in the line where the assault fell; one division of the 4th Corps being on the right, and the other on the opposite side of the river. The 12th and 16th Ky. were in the second or reserve line of Riley's brigade, near the Columbia pike and near the cotton gin. The heaviest part of Hood's assault was at that point, and it broke the front line, upon which the 12th and 16th Ky. sprang forward and restored the line in their front. Other reserves, assisted by Opdycke's brigade, a little to the right, did not exactly restore the broken line in their front but improvised a new line which they held.

This forward rush of the 12th and 16th Ky. deserves particular mention. The uproar occasioned by the engagement with Wagner's brigades was distinctly heard, and as these brigades came rushing over the works the fast pursuing enemy was close upon them. At this moment there was confusion in the line of Riley's brigade in the works. Part of the line gave way, and the 12th and 16th Ky. and 8th Tenn. saw what was occurring in their front where the gin house stood. Instantly this second line shouted "To the works! To the works!" and swept forward with a sudden rush, and struck like a thunderbolt into the works. There they met the enemy; they inside, the enemy outside. Muskets crossed and flashed in each other's faces. Standards of both armies were upon the works at the same moment.

Two companies of the 12th, A and B, were armed with Colt's revolving rifles. In this close encounter they were fearfully destructive. The men, who were panic stricken, were rallied. Those who stood against the works fired the guns loaded by those behind. The officers of the 12th fought as the men. Col. Rousseau passed back and forth along his line cheering the men. Capt. Brown, of Company D, leaped upon the works in the midst of the fight and waived the colors of the regiment. Capt. Crozer shouted defiance to Gen. Adams, who tried to ride over the works, but fell, horse and rider in the ditch. Lieut. Francis helped to handle a piece of artillery stationed where his company was. At no point in the battle was the assault more heavy than at the gin house where the 12th was engaged. Cleburne and Adams were killed near by, and in the ditch outside the slain lay in heaps.

The 12th lost some of its best men at Franklin. Among them was Jimmy Vaught, who distinguished himself at the crossing of Chattahoochee river. The conduct of the 12th in this battle is specially mentioned in Gen. Cox's official report and other reports, and the prompt action of Col. Rousseau commended. Col. Rousseau says in his official report: "In regard to the officers of my regiment, I deem it unnecessary to make any remark; they all did their duty to the fullest extent. But I would beg leave to mention particularly the conspicuous bravery and coolness of Capt. John Travis, Company B, acting major; Thos. Speed, adjutant; Captains Brown, Company D, and Crozer, Company C; Lieutenants J. B. Francis and I. D. Gray, Company I. These I saw myself and can bear testimony to their valuable service." The battle being over, the troops marched rapidly to Nashville that night. For three days and nights the 12th had had no rest.*

At daylight, December 15th, Thomas' whole army was moving. The 23d Corps was used to turn Hood's left flank. About the middle of the afternoon it moved in line of battle toward the enemy. As it swept forward, it encountered severe fire from the line of works protecting the extreme left of Hood's position. At dusk a halt was made, and breastworks of logs, stones and rails hastily made. At daylight next morning, directly in front of the 12th, a battery of twelve-pound brass guns opened furiously. Company C, of the 12th, commanded by Capt. Crozer, was in such a position it could pour a fire into this battery, and prevented its use.

In the afternoon Thomas was ready for a charge along his whole line. Word was given, and the line, as far as the eye could see to the right and left, rose and went forward. It was a grand assault by a line four or five miles long. It was successful at every point. Capt. Crozer and his men captured the battery they had silenced, and the 12th captured upward of fifty prisoners. The 12th had only five killed and wounded. Hood's army was crushed. It fled in the utmost confusion. The 12th joined in the pursuit. It spent Christmas day in camp at Columbia, from thence it marched to Clifton, on the Tennessee river. There it went on board transports and proceeded down the river. The corps numbered ten thousand. Reaching the Ohio, the fleet went up to Cincinnati. From thence the corps proceeded by rail over the Baltimore & Ohio road through Washington to Alexandria, Va. This was in January, 1865.

* Some claim that Opdycke's brigade did all that was done in the break at Franklin, but the official reports show what has been stated above, and also that Ruger's division, 23d Corps, and the brigades of Lane and Conrad all fought in that break. It required the strength of all of them, including Opdycke's brigade, to withstand the tremendous weight of the assault. All of these troops are entitled to the credit of holding the point, and far more than is usual in battles, credit is due to the officer in personal charge—Gen. J. D. Cox—who was present throughout where the fight was fiercest and the danger greatest.

The battle of Nashville occurred December 15th and 16th.

The 23d Corps remained at Alexandria about a week. The 3d day of February it went on board a fleet of vessels which lay at the docks at Alexandria and moved down the Potomac and out to sea.

The fleet was four days going from Alexandria to Fort Fisher, where it cast anchor February 7th. The troops disembarked at Fort Fisher, which had been recently captured, but the enemy occupied a line between that point and Wilmington.

Gen. Terry was in command of the Federal forces at Fort Fisher when the 23d Corps arrived. The united forces made several unsuccessful efforts to break through the enemy's line. The fleet also, consisting of a number of iron-clad vessels and monitors, co-operated with the land forces.

To accomplish the end desired, a portion of the 23d Corps, including the 12th, was placed on shipboard and transported down the coast to the old town of Smithville, near Fort Caswell. Embarking there the command began a flank movement which caused the enemy to fall back to Wilmington. Gen. Cox's command came upon the enemy entrenched at Town creek. He occupied their attention in front, while a portion of the troops crossed the creek and assailed them in flank. A stubborn fight ensued, in which there was severe loss on both sides. The 12th lost several killed and wounded. It captured a piece of artillery and several prisoners. The gun was captured by Company C, of the 12th, commanded by Capt. Hughes. The position of the enemy was taken, with a number of prisoners. Wilmington was taken February 22d.

From Wilmington the 12th proceeded with the 23d Corps to Kinston, N. C., where an engagement was had with the enemy, in which the 12th participated. The 12th then marched to Goldsboro; there the 23d corps joined Sherman's army, which had gone through to the sea. The enthusiasm of the soldiers was boundless. From Goldsboro the march was to Raleigh; at Raleigh, Gen. Grant reviewed the troops. The soldiers of the 12th declared they had been so long in active service they had forgotten how to parade.

From Raleigh the 12th went to Greensboro about the last of April, and there remained until July 11th, when the men were mustered out of service and started for Kentucky.

From Greensboro, N. C., through Danville and Petersburg, Va., to City Point by rail. From City Point to Baltimore by steamer. From Baltimore to Parkersburg, Va., over the B. & O. R. R. and thence by steamboat to Louisville.

The men retained their arms and accoutrements until they reached Louisville. Then for the last time they formed the regiment in line. They marched through the streets to the barracks, turned over their muskets and cartridge boxes and their battle-riven colors, and departed for their homes.

Thirteenth Kentucky Infantry.

In the southern and southeastern part of Kentucky at the beginning of the war, were a number of influential men, who were destined to play an important part in the great struggle. Among them may be named the Hobsons, E. H. Hobson, of Greensburg, A. G. Hobson, of Bowling Green, and W. E. Hobson, son of the latter. The 13th Ky. Infantry was raised in the fall of 1861, by Col. E. H. Hobson, assisted by W. E. Hobson, who became its colonel when E. H. Hobson was promoted to brigadier-general. While A. G. Hobson did not go into the field, he was very active in the work of organizing Union regiments. He was associated in this work with the prominent men of the state, meeting them at Louisville and other places in the summer of 1861, and assisting not only by his influence and counsel, but by his means in the procurement of arms. He was appointed by the State Military Board, paymaster and mustering officer, with rank of major, and his duties caused him to be in consultation with the various military officers, including Generals Sherman, Nelson and Buell. When the Confederates retired from Kentucky in February, 1862, Maj. A. G. Hobson went with Buell's army and in the movement against Corinth was aid on the staff of Gen. Beatty. From that place he returned to Bowling Green and began to raise a regiment, the 33d Ky. Later he and his younger son Jonathan, both accompanied Gen. Buell on his march to Louisville and Perryville, acting on his staff. He was also associated with Gen. Rosecrans, until July, 1863, when he was commissioned Provost Marshal by Secy. Stanton, in which capacity he acted until October, 1865. This brief personal mention is here made as it is due to one who was so serviceable to the Union cause.

The 13th Infantry being raised by Col. E. H. Hobson, and led during most of its career by Col. W. E. Hobson, was known as Hobson's regiment. The men came principally from the counties along Green river, Green, Metcalfe, Barren, Warren and others adjoining.

Before they were mustered into service they were engaged in active duty for the protection of the part of the state where it was raised. The following extract from a communication from Gen. Sherman at Louisville to Gen. Boyle at Lebanon, dated November 5, 1861, shows the importance of the Union troops in that section:

Push your organization and do not allow any of your regiments to engage in any marauding expeditions. It would be better for them to be united in one body, though I suppose enlistments would be delayed by concentration. Gen. Ward is here and exhibits an appointment as brigadier-general, and calls my attention to the fact that in his absence Col. Hobson is entitled to command. The great importance of forming your Kentucky regiments will force me to allow Gen. Ward to resume his command, and I beg you will push the formation of your regiments. The force under Harlan, Ward and Grider should be sufficient to prevent any movement from Green river toward Thomas, and that is all I design during the process of formation.

The early organization of Hobson's men is shown by the communication of a Confederate major to Gen. Hindman, October 28th, saying Hobson's men are at Greensburg.

The 13th was mustered into service December 10, 1861, at Camp Hobson, near Greensburg, by Capt. S. M. Kellogg. From Kentucky it marched to Nashville after the fall of Donelson, and from thence proceeded with Buell's army to Pittsburg Landing.

In the battle of Shiloh the 13th was in Crittenden's division, Boyle's brigade. Gen. Boyle's brigade consisted of the 13th and 9th Ky., 19th and 59th Ohio. He says, in his report, that he disembarked his four regiments at Pittsburg Landing the night of the 6th, and formed in rear of Gen. Nelson's line. Next morning at 5 o'clock, he formed on the right of Nelson. Marching steadily forward the enemy was encountered and heavy fighting began. He thus speaks of the 13th: "The 13th, led by Col. Hobson in a gallant charge upon the enemy, drove them back with great slaughter, forcing them to desert their guns. In this charge Col. Hobson and Maj. Hobson, acting lieutenent-colonel, and Capt. Fowler, acting major, and acting Adjt. Stewart, behaved with great coolness and courage, and with the exception of a recoil caused by a portion of Wisconsin troops breaking through their lines, creating some disorder, they steadily led their brave men forward, driving the enemy before them, Maj. Hobson had his horse shot dead under him."

Gen. Crittenden mentions the 13th in the following terms:

"When the change was ordered, I dispatched Capt. Starling to bring up Hobson's regiment, the 13th Ky., to the support of the 14th Brigade; this regiment came promptly and in good order, in time to share the perils and honors of the charge." Col. Hobson says: "During the whole day's engagement the men under my command acted with the utmost coolness and gallantry." He mentions Maj. W. E. Hobson, Capt. D. T. Towles, also Surgeons Moore and Ingram. The casualties were eight killed and forty-one wounded.

From the field of Shiloh the 13th marched with the army to Corinth, and after the Federal occupation of that place, it marched with Buell's army by way of Iuka, Florence, Tuscumbia and Huntsville to Sequatchie Valley, during the summer of '62.

When Bragg moved to Kentucky, the 13th accompanied Buell's army, and marched by way of Nashville, Bowling Green, Munfordville to Louisville, and out to Perryville. Being with Crittenden's corps on that field it did not get into the engagement, but pursued Bragg out of the state.

After Buell's retirement from Kentucky, the 13th was held in the state on duty at various points. In the organization of the Army of Kentucky, December, 1862, it was with a brigade consisting of seven regiments and two batteries commanded by Col. E. H. Hobson, at Munfordville, the regiment being in charge of Maj. W. E. Hobson. From that place it moved in January, 1863, in pursuit of Morgan. It remained on guard duty in Kentucky through the winter and spring of 1863; on the 13th of March, Col. E. H. Hobson was promoted to brigadier-general and from that time he was employed in charge of troops in Kentucky. Maj. W. E. Hobson was commissioned lieutenant-colonel February 15, 1863, and colonel March 13th, being at that time nineteen years of age, and it is said the youngest colonel in the service. It may be here stated that he had acquired a military training by commanding, as captain, a military company at the time the war commenced. Capt. B. P. Estes was made major February 15th, and lieutenant-colonel May 15th. Capt. John P. Duncan was promoted major March 25th.

The 13th was kept on duty in Kentucky at Munfordville and other places in the summer of 1863, until Gen. Burnside organized his force for the East Tennessee expedition. It was then placed in the 2d Brigade of Gen. Julius White's division, and marched through the mountains of Kentucky to East Tennessee.

The following extract from a published account gives a graphic picture of the services of this regiment on this campaign:

In the summer his (Hobson's) regiment was connected with the East Tennessee campaign, and at Loudon was stationed to guard the crossings of the Tennessee river. When Longstreet advanced upon the place in overwhelming numbers, Col. Hobson was selected to cover the retreat of Burnside upon Knoxville. At Huff's Ferry he encountered Longstreet's advance, and heroically fought for several hours, losing forty-one men, and staying the advance until the Union retreat was secure. For this exploit the colonel received the thanks of Gen. Burnside, and was regarded as the "hero of Huff's Ferry."

At Campbell's Station he was put in command of the 2d Brigade and ordered to cover the retreat of the entire army upon Knoxville, receiving his instructions personally from Gen. Burnside. So skillfully was this duty performed that he received the personal thanks of the general.

During the siege of Knoxville Col. Hobson distinguished himself in command if his brigade, eliciting the highest encomiums for his skill and bravery.

When the active service was over in East Tennessee, the 13th remained in camp until the opening of the spring of 1864. It then marched to Chattanooga and in May united with Gen. Sherman's army in the Atlanta campaign. It was then in the 1st Brigade, of Hascall's division, 23d Army Corps, Gen. Schofield. Until June the regiment was under the command of Col. W. E. Hobson, when he was placed in command of the brigade and the regiment was led by Lieut. Col. Estes. It bore a gallant part in this great campaign, being at Resaca, Dallas, Cassville, Allatoona, Kennesaw, and all the battles around Atlanta, going on the grand movement south of the city to Jonesboro and Lovejoy.

The following extract from the published account already used, shows the movements of the 13th and the brigade to which it belonged:

In all the battles of Sherman's Georgia campaign, from Buzzard's Roost and Resaca, Col. Hobson took a conspicuous part, and brought his command to a high state of perfection in drill and discipline. Near Kennesaw he was put in command of the 2d Brigade of the 2d Division, which position he now occupies. Nobly has this brigade and its commander borne their parts through the June and July battles. It is indeed a proud privilege to write in reference to the noble Kentucky regiments now before Atlanta, and we shall endeavor to resume our narrative when we have collected the facts. All have distinguished themselves on every battlefield. They are Kentucky names, and we love to repeat them; they are heroes and we are proud of them; they are patriots and we honor them.

After the fall of Atlanta the 13th was ordered to Kentucky. It went on duty at Bowling Green and Col. Hobson commanded the post. It so continued until in January, 1865, when it was ordered to Louisville and was mustered out of service, January 12, 1865.

The following extract from a letter written by Gen. Julius White after the war, shows his estimate of this excellent and faithful regiment:

I have commanded during the war some sixty regiments of infantry, and among them all there was not one better, if as good, as the 13th Ky. Not only was that regiment wholly reliable during an engagement (for they were always as brave as the bravest), but in camp, on the march, on all occasions and everywhere, that regiment could be depended upon for the prompt performance of every duty. The country owes the 13th Ky. a heavy debt of gratitude for its lofty patriotism and unyielding courage and endurance.

Note.—Gen. E. H. Hobson, the original colonel of the 13th, being early promoted brigadier-general, was kept on duty much of the time in Kentucky. One event in his service deserves special note. When Morgan came into Kentucky, July, 1863, on the raid which extended across the Ohio river, Gen. Hobson endeavored to intercept him at Lebanon. When he reached that point, however, Morgan had passed. The commands of Hobson, Shackelford and Wolford arrived at Lebanon July 6th, and that day started in pursuit of Morgan, in obedience to the following order:

Cincinnati, Ohio, July 6th, 4:30 p. m.

General Hobson: It is reported that a small portion of Morgan's command was at Harrousburg this morning, but the main body went from Springfield in the direction of Bardstown. You will combine the commands of Gen. Shackelford and Gen. Wolford, and, after ascertaining as near as possible, the direction of Gen. Morgan's route, you will endeavor to overtake him or cut him off. Please telegraph at once the composition of your own brigade, and also that of Shackelford and Wolford. You are authorized to subsist your command upon the country, and impress the necessary horses to replace the broken down ones. This should be done in a regular way. Morgan ought to be broken to pieces before he gets out of the state. Answer at once.

A. E. Burnside, Major-General.

Gen. Hobson, in his report, says he took command of the entire force upon receipt of this order. July 7th he reached Bardstown. July 10th he was across the Ohio at Brandenburg. The pursuit went on through Indiana and Ohio, until Morgan was captured by these pursuers July 26th.

He expresses his thanks to the officers and enlisted men of his command "for their untiring energy and cheerfulness during the long and tedious march of over 800 miles, being in the saddle most of the time for twenty-one days and nights, deprived of sleep and often on short rations, yet they were ever eager to be moving. They deserve, and will receive, the thanks of a grateful people." (See also accounts of 1st, 8th, 9th and 12th Ky. Cavalry.)

Fourteenth Kentucky Infantry.

The 14th Ky. Infantry was organized in the fall of 1861, at Louisa, Ky., by Col. Laban T. Moore. Associated with him were Colonels John C. Cochran, George W. Gallup; Lieutenant-Colonels Joseph R. Brown, Orlando Brown, R. M. Thomas; Majors Wm. B. Burke, Drury J. Burchet and Adjutants John F. Babbitt and E. J. Roberts, together with the various captains and lieutenants of companies.

The section of the state where the regiment was raised required not only organization of military forces, but their continual presence being on the border of Virginia, and subject to incursions of the enemy throughout the war.

The 14th was regularly mustered into the service December 10, 1861, by Lieut. C. B. Throckmorton of the regular army. During the process of organization in the fall of 1861, the enemy was in close proximity all the time, and the 14th was employed for considerable time in that section. It was engaged in numerous encounters before it was mustered into service, fighting at Ivy Mountain and Middle Creek. It was in the command of Gen. Garfield, who in January, '62, reported the 14th as "composed of excellent material, but not yet drilled and disciplined."

Col. Moore resigned January 1, 1862, and January 6th Lieut. Col. John C. Cochran was made colonel in his stead. Col. Cochran commanded the regiment about one year, excepting such time as he had charge of the brigade. Col. Cochran was from Fayette county, Ky., and at the outbreak of the war was lieutenant of a military company at Lexington, known as the "Chasseurs," of which Sanders Bruce was captain.

During the winter of 1862 the 14th continued on duty in the Big Sandy region, in Gen. Garfield's command. In the spring of 1862 Gen. Buell sent an expedition under Gen. George W. Morgan, to capture Cumberland Gap. The 14th accompanied this expedition, and the Gap was taken June 18th. The approach was from both sides, and the 14th engaged in a severe fight at Tazewell, Tenn., in the movement from that side. Col. Cochran's horse was killed under him.

Gen. George Morgan's command remained in occupation of Cumberland Gap until September 17th, when the invasion of Kentucky by Bragg and others compelled him to abandon it, and make the celebrated march across the east end of the state to the Ohio river. This successful retreat was one of the brilliant military achievements of the war.

Gen. Morgan in his account of this movement published in the Century War Book, says:

> The Confederates were invading Kentucky in three columns; Bragg on the left, Smith in the center, Marshall on the right. They regarded the capture or destruction of my division as certain. Our situation was indeed critical. We had been three months in this isolated position. Our only reasonable hope of succor had been destroyed by the defeat and dispersion of Nelson's forces at Richmond, August 30th. We were destitute of forage.

The only thing he could do was to abandon the Gap and attempt to march to the Ohio river. Having determined to do this, he says:

> Holding out the idea that we were seeking to obtain supplies by way of the barren wilderness through which I proposed to reach the Ohio, I had previously caused Lieut. Col. Geo. W. Gallup, of the 14th Ky., a soldier of rare merit, to send me at intervals men of his command familiar with the country through which each day's march would have to be made. The information given me by these brave mountaineers was discouraging.

But that was all that could be done. September 17th Gen. Morgan received word that a flag of truce was approaching; he says: "I sent Lieut. Col. Gallup, with a small escort, a few shrewd officers, to meet the enemy's flag outside our picket lines." While the conference was going on an explosion accidentally occurred in the Gap. A Confederate officer said to Col. Gallup, "this looks like an evacuation"; Gallup in an off-hand way replied, "not much," and succeeded in removing the suspicion. That night the place was evacuated at eight o'clock, and Col. Gallup was left as rear guard, to remain as long as he could, and when he left to fire the buildings and blow up all the ammunition that had to be abandoned. He did his work, joined the retreating columns, and on the 3d day of October the whole command safely reached the Ohio river at Greenup. The movement was one of the most extraordinary of the whole war. The Kentucky regiments in it were the 3d, 14th, 22d and 19th Ky. Infantry, Mundy's cavalry, and Patterson's engineers.

The 14th proceeded to Louisville, and from thence marched to Danville. It remained in that section of the state part of the summer, being commanded by Col. John C. Cochran. In the organization of the Department of the Ohio, August 31, 1863, four companies were at Mt. Sterling, under Maj. Robt. T. Williams, being in Maltby's brigade, Boyle's division.

In November the regiment was assigned to duty in the eastern part of Kentucky, being commanded then by Col.

Gallup. In December a portion of the regiment was under command of Lieut. Col. Orlando Brown, with a force commanded by Col. Gallup; and another portion was with Col. H. C. Lilly, under Gen. Garrard, in the district of Somerset.

In January, 1864, a portion of the 14th re-enlisted in the veteran organization.

February 15, 1864, the 14th and 39th Ky., under Col. Gallup, captured Col. Ferguson at Laurel Creek Gap, and Col. Gallup, in his report, compliments Capt. John C. Collins and Capt. Wm. H. Bartram of the 14th. April 13th, the 14th was in a sharp fight at Puncheon creek, Magoffin county. April 15th, it fought at Piketon; April 16th, it was at Louisa, and May 9th in a skirmish at Pound Gap. At that time it was ordered to the front to join Gen. Sherman's army in Georgia. Proceeding by rail it was at Cass Station, Ga., May 23d, and at Burnt Hickory, May 24th. In the organization of Sherman's army the 14th was commanded by Col. Gallup, in Strickland's brigade, Hascall's division, 23d Army Corps. June 2d, in a fight near Pumpkin Vine creek, Capt. Patrick was killed, whom Gen. Hascall, in his official report, calls "a most brave and gallant officer."

In June the 14th was assigned to the very hazardous duty of holding the enemy in check while the other troops threw up defenses, which duty it most gallantly performed. Gen. Schofield makes the following mention of it in his report: "On the 22d of June it was discovered that the enemy was advancing in force; our troops were therefore ordered to intrench the position they held as rapidly as possible, while the 14th Ky., of Gen. Hascall's division, was ordered to hold the enemy in check. This gallant regiment detained the enemy one and a half hours, and only retired to the main line when ordered to do so, contesting stubbornly every foot of ground." The enemy then attacked the intrenched line and was repulsed.

The 14th was engaged in all the movements of the Atlanta campaign, skirmishing, fighting, charging lines, defending positions, during the entire summer. Col. Gallup says, in his official report: "Since the 22d day of June my regiment had participated in all the labor, marches, engagements and skirmishes of the 3d Brigade, 2d Division, 23d Army Corps."

Col. Strickland, in his report of the campaign, says the regiments of his brigade and their officers, to wit: 14th Ky., Col. Gallup; 27th Ky., Col. Ward; 20th Ky., Col. Waller, all deserve the highest praise that can be bestowed by language for their prompt, energetic, skillful and gallant conduct at all times and places through the campaign. He also speaks in high praise of Lieut. Col. Brown; Maj. R. M. Thomas, and Lieutenants T. D. Marcum and Geo. B. Patton, of the 14th.

The casualties of this faithful and gallant regiment in the Atlanta campaign were, one hundred and fifty-seven killed and wounded, including eight commissioned officers. It remained with Sherman's army until November, 1864. At that time Gov. Bramlette requested that it be returned to Kentucky. Gen. Schofield assented and on the 15th of November it was assigned to the First Military District of Kentucky. December 5th it was at Bowling Green and December 31st at Louisa. It remained on duty in that section during the remainder of its service, engaged in protecting the country at various points along the Virginia line. It was mustered out September 15, 1865, at Louisville, having been in service nearly four full years and achieved a splendid reputation for efficiency.

Maj. Burchett of the 14th was appointed United States marshal for Kentucky April 3, 1889, by President Harrison, and he added to his reputation as a gallant soldier the further distinction of a most admirable civil officer.

Col. John C. Cochran tendered his resignation January 8, 1863, which was indorsed by Gen. A. Baird, as follows: "I earnestly recommend the acceptance of Col. Cochran's resignation. He has served well and faithfully and has good grounds for asking to retire." His resignation was accepted with the following indorsement: "Resignation accepted January, 1863, commanding brigade and relieved from duty January 16, 1863.

Col. Geo. W. Gallup was appointed colonel January 13, 1863. He was with the regiment continuously from the beginning to the end. When he was made colonel, Gen. Baird said of him: "He is an able officer." His career proved this to be true. He was a daring soldier, but also displayed judgment and military skill.

Lieut. Cols. Joseph R. Brown, Orlando Brown, Jr., and Rhys. M. Thomas, were excellent officers. Capt. David A. Mims became colonel of the 39th Ky. Inf.

Among the line officers of the 14th, all of whom were fine soldiers, Captain John F. Babbitt, who was promoted from adjutant, may be specially mentioned.

Fifteenth Kentucky Infantry.

September 10, 1861, Curran Pope, George P. Jouett and W. P. Campbell, announced that they would raise a regiment. They rapidly received the requisite number of volunteers, and the regiment became the 15th Ky. Infantry. Curran Pope was a brother of Hamilton Pope, a native of Louisville, and was a West Point graduate. He became the colonel of the regiment. One year later, he was mortally wounded at the head of his command, in the battle of Perryville, and a few days after died of his wounds at Danville. He was an accomplished officer and full of promise and distinction as a military man. George P. Jouett was a citizen of Louisville, son of the celebrated Kentucky artist, Matt Jouett. He became lieutenant-colonel, and William P. Campbell, of Louisville, was major. These two officers were also killed at Perryville. They were both men of the highest type, and their untimely death was greatly mourned as a severe loss to the regiment and to the service. The material of the 15th Ky. all came from Louisville and its vicinity.

Several who had been active in recruiting for this regiment were left out in the organization of fragments of companies. Among them was Alfred Pirtle, who had served in the Home Guard and afterward in other connections.

The regiment was organized in its camp at the fair grounds, near the city, and as soon as this was done it was ordered to duty on the Nashville railroad. For a short time it encamped at New Haven, and from thence went to Bacon Creek, where, on December 14th, it was formally mustered into the service. In February, 1862, it was in Bowling Green, immediately after the evacuation of that place by the Confederates. From there it proceeded to Nashville, Franklin, Mitchellville, Tenn., and to Huntsville, Ala. For about six months it was engaged in scouts, reconnoissances and guard duty, being in Mitchell's division, of Buell's army.

In August, 1862, it entered upon the memorable march of Buell's army from Tennessee to Louisville. Reaching Elizabethtown, Ky., it marched from that place to Louisville—forty-three miles—in twenty-four hours. From Louisville it marched out to Perryville. It was then in Lytle's brigade, of Rousseau's division.

The terrible experience of the 15th Ky. at Perryville was a great shock to the people of Louisville. It was engaged in the severest part of the battle. The three field officers were killed, as stated, also Lieutenants McClure and McGrath, and sixty-three men. Two hundred were wounded. The steadiness of the regiment under the most trying circumstances was a subject of comment, and received mention in several reports. Gen. Rousseau's brigade maintained its position against repeated attacks until, in the afternoon, "an immense force of fresh troops of the enemy moving around to his right, concealed by the undulation of the ground, turned his right flank, and fell upon the right and rear of his brigade, and forced it to retire, which it did under the orders of Col. Lytle, who was at that moment wounded, as he thought fatally, and, refusing to be taken from the field, was taken prisoner by the enemy." Gen. Rousseau says: "Hearing of this condition of things, I galloped over toward the right, and found the brigade formed in line of battle, the right (the 15th Ky. Volunteers, Col. Pope) resting on the hill at Clark's house, with Loomis' battery immediately in the rear of an eminence, the 10th Ohio and the 3d Ohio, Col. Beatty, on the left of the road. These regiments had, without support, struggled hard to hold their line of battle for several hours, and were only forced to retire after immense loss and the movements of the enemy above referred to." He also says: "While near the 15th Ky. I saw a heavy force of the enemy advancing upon our right, the same that had turned Lytle's right flank. It was moving steadily up in full view of where Gen. Gilbert's corps had been during the day, the left flank of which was not more than four hundred yards from it. On approaching the 15th Ky. (though broken and shattered), it rose to its feet and cheered, and as one man moved to the top of the hill, where it could see the enemy, and I ordered it to lie down." Gen. Rousseau specially compliments Maj. William P. McDowell of the 15th, who served on his staff.

Col. John Beatty of the 3d Ohio, in his report, says: "I desire to bear testimony to the gallant conduct of the 15th Ky., which fought side by side with ourselves."

For a time during the battle, the 15th encountered a terrific fire from the enemy, who had shelter behind a stone fence. The 15th at the same time had the less substantial shelter of a rail fence and a barn, both of which were riddled by shells.

Maj. McDowell, in his account of this regiment, says: "In the midst of the battle Capt. James B. Forman seized the colors and mounted the remains of the rail fence, waving them and cheering the men to continue resistance."

After the battle of Perryville, the regiment marched through Crab Orchard, Stanford and Lebanon to Bowling Green. There Capt. James B. Forman was made colonel in place of Col. Curran Pope. It then proceeded to Nashville, where it was assigned to Beatty's brigade, of Rousseau's division, in the Army of the Cumberland, commanded by Gen. George H. Thomas.

On the 31st of December it was engaged in the great battle of Murfreesboro, or Stone's River. Maj. McDowell says: "About 9 o'clock a. m. we came up close to the front and could see orderlies riding hurriedly hither and thither. A group of officers composed of Gen. Rousseau, with his brigade and regimental commanders, was formed immediately in front of the 15th, when all returning to their commands, we were faced to the right and moved hurriedly to the cedar forest, to stem the current of an almost irresistible storm in the cedar glades, where Gen. McCook's corps had been violently attacked, and sorely passed. Passing in rear of Gen. Sill's division, our bridage got into the same kind of a position as that held at Perryville, that is on the extreme right wing of the army, with the 15th on the right of the brigade. Here, with instructions to hold the enemy in check until the artillery could be gotten out of the thicket, we met the enemy and stopped for a while his triumphant charges. We held the road until the last gun and caisson had passed safely, but at a terrible cost to the 15th, for in a short half hour we lost our gallant young colonel—(James B. Foreman) shot from his horse—in the flower of his youth, being only a little past his twenty-first birthday. Eighty others were killed and wounded on that fatal day at Stone's river. Holding our position a little too long, we had to fight front, flank and rear to get back to the 14th Corps' position in the center, for the enemy had passed around our right and were enveloping us before we knew it. Long will the members of the 15th remember the appearance of the 'massed artillery' on the right of the turnpike as they emerged from the woods, and never can they forget the outburst, when they got back to those guns, for the earth trembled and thousands went down in the desperate charges made against them."

From the battlefield at Stone's river the regiment went to Tullahoma; there Marion C. Taylor was made colonel; Noah Cartwright, lieutenant-colonel; W. G. Helpin, major, and D. N. Sharp was made adjutant.

June, July and August, 1863, the 15th proceeded with Rosecrans' army, doing its full share of duty, and in September was at Chickamauga. In the movements immediately preceding the battle of Chickamauga and in that battle the 15th was in Beatty's brigade (1st), Negley's division (2d), 14th Army Corps, Gen. Thomas. The regiment was commanded by Col. Marion C. Taylor.

August 30th, the brigade left Cove Spring near Stevenson, Ala., marched across Sand mountain by Moore's Spring, and Brown's Spring, and September 6th encamped at McKaig's Spring, on the north side of Lookout mountain. September 7th, the 15th marched to the summit of Lookout mountain, the enemy's cavalry retiring before it. September 8th, moved to Cooper's Gap; 9th, to Steven's Gap; 10th, guarded train from Steven's Gap to Chickamauga; 17th, marched to Owens' Ford on Chickamauga creek; 18th, to Crawfish Spring.

September 19th, the battle of Chickamauga opened. It raged that day and the next. It is impossible in the present limits to describe the fighting of those two days. The 15th is mentioned many times in the reports, fighting obstinately. Gen. Beatty says: "Col. Taylor, 15th Ky., to whom an order had been given to haul off by hand two pieces of artillery, which had been abandoned, enlarged upon his instructions, and gathered five and attaching them to limbers succeeded in saving them all." In all the reports the conduct of the 15th is mentioned in the most complimentary manner. The 15th lost five killed, and forty-three wounded. On the 21st, Beatty's brigade was in line of battle on the east side of the Chattanooga road, from whence it moved to a ridge east of and near Rossville. There it was fiercely attacked, and Gen. Negley says, after a brisk engagement with artillery and musketry the enemy was checked in the Gap by Stanley's brigade and driven from the mountain crest by a gallant charge of the 15th Ky., of Gen. Beatty's brigade.

Gen. Negley bestows the highest compliments upon the officers and men of his entire division for their endurance, fortitude, cheerful obedience and heroic conduct during the campaign.

The 15th remained at Chattanooga and was assigned to post duty. While not participating directly in the battle of Mission Ridge, November 25th, it was under orders and its colonel, Marion Taylor, went personally into the battle with the division and was highly complimented for his service by the division commander, with whom he acted. During this battle the regiment was under command of Lieut. Col. Halpin. The 15th remained at Chattanooga during the winter, and in the spring of 1864, participated in the first movements of the Atlanta campaign. On the 2d day of May it was at Ringgold; the 8th, in front of Buzzard's Roost; the 9th, at Rocky Face; 12th, passed Snake Creek Gap; the 14th, fought at Resaca, where the regiment suffered great loss by the death of Capt. Irwin McDowell, who was killed on the enemy's works while cheering his men forward.

Capt. McDowell was a young officer of the finest capacity and promise. He was a brother of Maj. Henry C. McDowell and Maj. Wm. P. McDowell. The sister of these noble young officers was the wife of Hon. Bland Ballard, U. S. District Judge in Kentucky. No nobler spirit was sacrificed in the war than that of Capt. Irwin McDowell.

The 15th having started with the opening of the campaign continued through to the end, being under command of Lieut. Col. Halpin. Fighting its way with Sherman's army through May, June, July and August, it was in all the battles until Atlanta was captured, the 15th being at that time with Gen. Sherman, at Jonesboro. The loss of the regiment in this campaign was sixty-one.

After the capture of Atlanta the 15th was with Sherman's army until the march to the sea began in November, 1864, when it was assigned to the command of Gen. Thomas, in Tennessee. It was stationed at Chattanooga, and October 8th was sent to Bridgeport, Ala. It remained there on garrison duty until December, when it was ordered to Louisville. On the 14th of January, 1865, it was mustered out of service, having served faithfully three years, three months, three weeks and three days. Of the eight hundred and eighty-eight men mustered into service in 1861, over four hundred were killed and wounded. Few regiments made such a record as the 15th; its service was hard, its losses great, its heroism complete.

Col. Taylor located in Shelbyville, Ky., after the war and practiced law. He won distinction and was greatly beloved. He died about 1871.

Adjt. D. N. Sharp located in same place, where he is a leading citizen.

Sixteenth Kentucky Infantry.

This regiment was recruited and organized in the fall of 1861 by Col. Charles A. Marshall, at Camp Kenton, Mason county, Ky. Col. Marshall belonged to the noted family of that name, being the son of Capt. Thomas Marshall, who was a brother of Chief Justice John Marshall. He was a prominent man in his section of the state having represented his county in the state legislature a number of times and his influence, which was very great, was cast on the side of the Union.

Being requested by Gen. Nelson he called for volunteers for a regiment, and in a very short time had the requisite number in camp from the counties of Mason, Fleming, Bracken, Lewis and Whitley. Before the regiment was mustered into the service it accompanied the expedition under Gen. Nelson into Eastern Kentucky, which resulted in the battle of Ivy Mountain, November 8th, where the Confederates under Gen. John S. Williams were defeated and compelled to retire into Virginia.

Gen. Nelson, in his report of this battle, mentions the service of three Kentucky regiments, the 24th, under Col. Hurt, the 7th Ky. Cavalry, Col. Metcalfe, the 16th Ky., Col. Marshall. He mentions Col. Marshall's advance against the enemy, and in leading a charge that he lost four men killed and thirteen wounded. Gen. Williams, in his report, made November 9th, attributes his defeat to his inferior force, and states that his route would be to Abingdon, Va.

After this campaign the 16th returned to Camp Kenton, and a few days later occupied the fair grounds on the Mt. Sterling pike near Maysville. Here the organization was perfected, and the regiment was mustered into service January 27, 1862. Remaining at that place until March 2d, it then received orders and proceeded by steamboat up the Ohio, and up the Big Sandy to join Gen. Garfield at Piketon. Upon arriving at that point, Gen. Garfield had been ordered south, and Col. Cranor, of the 40th Ohio, was in command. Col. Cranor moved his command, including the 16th, to Prestonburg. The 16th remained in that command during the spring and summer of 1862. In May, Col. Marshall was compelled to resign on account of his health, and Col. J. W. Craddock took command.

August, 1862, the 16th was ordered to Covington; thence to Cynthiana, thence to Louisville, and from thence to Bowling Green. In the months of September and October it was at Shepherdsville, West Point and Munfordville. In December and January it was in the pursuit of Morgan through Springfield, Lebanon, Campbellsville and Columbia. Returning from that pursuit it encamped at Lebanon, where it was held on duty to protect the country from Confederate raids, during the winter and spring of 1863.

On the 2d of June Col. Craddock died at Louisville and he was succeeded by Col. J. W. Gault, of Mason county. At that time the 16th was in Gen. Hobson's brigade in Judah's division. In July it was at Munfordville. In August it was in Col. O. H. Moore's brigade, Mauson's division, 23d Army Corps. It was then ordered to Glasgow, and from thence marched with Gen. Burnside's expedition to East Tennessee. After a continuous march of twenty days through the mountains it arrived at Loudon, Tenn., where it remained in camp until late in October. It then marched to Sweetwater. There meeting the advance of Gen. Longstreet's force it was ordered back to Loudon. From thence it marched to Kingston, where it aided in repelling an attack made by Confederate cavalry. It participated in the movements connected with the siege of Knoxville, and afterward marched to Strawberry Plains, and from thence to Mossy creek where, on the 29th of December, it was engaged in a severe battle in which the Federals under command of Generals Elliott and Sturgis successfully fought a large Confederate force under Generals Martin, Armstrong and Morgan, and pursued them from the field. Gen. Elliott says in his report: "The pursuit was rapid and continued until dark." In this engagement the service of the 16th is mentioned in complimentary terms by the commanding generals. At Mossy creek, December 27, 1863, the 16th re-enlisted in the veteran organization, and from thence marched to Kentucky, crossing the mountains by way of Big Creek Gap. The month of January was spent on "veteran furlough," and when that was over the men reassembled and went into camp at Louisville where they remained performing guard duty during the months of February and March, 1864.

April, 1864, the 16th was ordered to Camp Nelson, from whence it marched through the mountains of Kentucky and by way of Jacksboro, Tenn., to Knoxville. From thence it proceeded by rail to Red Clay in Northern Georgia, where it joined Sherman's army organized for the Atlanta campaign. It was assigned to Riley's brigade (1st) Cox's division, 23d Army Corps. The regiment was at that time commanded by Col. J. W. Gault. May 14th, the 16th participated in the battle of Resaca, in which it lost severely. Capt. Pumpelly wounded, and Lieut. Laurie killed. Two men were killed and twenty-seven wounded. Col. Reilly says in his report, speaking of the charge: "The 16th Ky. Veteran Infantry, 112th Ill. and 100th Ohio, being in the front line of the brigade, passed up the slope, over the crest, and over the rifle pits without a perceivable halt."

Col. Gault commanded the 16th until it reached Burnt Hickory; severe sickness, consequent on exposure, caused him to relinquish command, and from that time until the end of the war the regiment was led by Lieut. Col. J. S. White, a most excellent and gallant officer. The 16th continued with Sherman's army through the campaign. The regiment and its officers are mentioned in the reports of Col. Reilly and Gen. Cox many times, and always in the highest praise. The reports show the regiment was engaged in many battles and skirmishes in this campaign. At Cartersville, Etowah river, Dallas, Kennesaw, crossing of Chattahoochee, around Atlanta, Jonesboro, and many other places.

After the capture of Atlanta, and when Gen. Hood moved into Northern Georgia, the 16th went with Sherman's army in pursuit, spending the entire month of October in marching. When the pursuit was abandoned, and Sherman started with part of his army to the sea, the 16th was sent with the troops under Gen. Thomas to Nashville, and from thence to Pulaski, Tenn., under Gen. Schofield.

Upon the approach of Hood's army, the 16th, with the other troops under Schofield, made a forced march to Columbia. There, in the midst of a fight between the Confederate cavalry and the Union cavalry, the infantry skirmishers soon put the enemy to flight.

The night of the 25th the regiment was hurriedly ordered out, and crossed Duck river and encamped on high ground, opposite Columbia, overlooking low timbered land around which the river flowed making an almost horseshoe bend.

On the 26th its men were at work on fortifications, one at the point of the bend near the river bank, and another on the upland in front of the camp.

On the 27th several companies occupied the works near the river under Capt. Hammer, of Company "B." Heavy skirmishing and artillery firing going on most of the day, and part of the night, and all of the 28th.

On the 29th the enemy were observed descending the opposite bank of the river in force, and, backed by a heavy artillery fire, soon charged the advanced Federal positions, occupied by the 16th and 12th Ky. Infantry regiments. A portion of both regiments gave way and fell back on the main line where they were rallied and reformed—nearly a regiment of them—by Lieut. Col. Rousseau, of the 12th, and Capt. M. C. Hutchins, of Gen. Riley's staff, and charging down and around the hill re-enforced those who had remained, slowly retiring and keeping the enemy at bay until reaching some fallen timber, where they were joined by the rallied troops. Here the enemy was checked and a furious battle raged until the rebels, although in overwhelming numbers, were driven back under the cover of the river bank, leaving the ground strewed with their dead and wounded.

This severe battle, which had the important result of delaying the crossing of Hood's artillery and trains, has had less mention in history than is due, on account of being overshadowed by the great battle at Franklin the next day. Gen. Thomas says in his official report: "November 29th, the 16th and 12th Ky. Veteran Infantry regiments, supported on flanks by skirmish lines from other brigades, protecting ford, was attacked by the enemy in force, and forced back from the ford, but almost immediately, and with the assistance of artillery, recovered the lost ground, driving the enemy, with comparatively heavy loss, under the bank and across the river." The holding of this crossing of Duck river prevented Hood's artillery and trains from passing that entire day, and up to three o'clock the next morning, and caused Hood to fight the battle of Franklin with but two batteries which he had taken with him on his flanking movement to Spring Hill.

Late in the afternoon, Gen. Cox directed Gen. Riley to withdraw his command at dark and move toward Franklin, leaving these two regiments to keep the enemy in check until midnight. Maj. Dow, of Gen. Cox's staff, was left with them, with orders to bring them off at midnight, which was done.

After an all night march, passing en route the enemy in plain view, camped in the fields on the right of the road just before reaching Spring Hill. The regiment arrived at Franklin about half-past eleven o'clock the next morning, worn and weary with two days' and three nights' fighting and marching. Here the regiment was placed on the reserve line about one hundred yards behind the main line, with its right resting on the Columbia pike, its left reaching a point immediately back of the cotton gin.

The Confederate army appeared on Winstead's hill about half-past three o'clock, and debouching into the plain, formed their lines with the coolness of veterans and commenced their advance. The soldiers of the Federal army could see every movement. The day was perfect, the sky unclouded. They moved forward like soldiers on dress parade, and our men realized that a terrible battle was about to take place.

About half a mile in front of the main line, two brigades of Wagner's division had been stationed, and as the Confederates approached, these brigades commenced firing, instead of withdrawing as they should have done. Their firing checked the advance immediately in front, but the enemy was passing each flank, and there was nothing to do but to rush back to the main line. They were rapidly followed by the Confederates. As they crowded over the breastworks with the enemy close behind, the men in the works became to some extent demoralized, and a portion of the line for a moment was undefended. Capt. M. C. Hutchins, of the 16th Ky., was on Gen. Riley's staff, and, though thrown down in his effort to rally the breaking men, recovered his feet, and continued his work. The reserves, consisting of the 12th and 16th Ky. and 8th Tenn., seeing the danger promptly charged forward, and engaged in a hand to hand fight at the works. The rally of the men who had given way strengthened the line, and though the pressure was tremendous the position was held, and within an hour the repulse was complete. The 16th suffered severely in this battle, its actual loss in killed, wounded and missing being eighty-three. Col. White was severely wounded in the face, but with a bloody bandage about his head, continued with his command.

Among the killed were Capt. Henry Palmer, Company H, and Lieut. Joseph Heiser, Company C. Lieutenants Brown and Courtney were wounded. The command devolved on Capt. Jacob Miller, who led the regiment from Franklin that night, and arrived at Nashville next morning. Gen. Reilly, in his report speaking of the break in the line, says: "The line was rapidly rallied by their officers and with the assistance of the 16th Ky. at this moment led by Lieut. Col. White, who, seeing and appreciating the disaster that would be caused if our line should be broken, gallantly ordered and led his regiment forward before orders to that effect could reach him." *

(See account of 12th Ky. Infantry.)

On the 15th and 16th days of December, the 16th was engaged in the great battle of Nashville, being with the 23d Corps, which moved upon and attacked the left flank of Hood's army. After the battle it joined in the pursuit through Franklin and Columbia and then marched to Clifton on the Tennessee river.

In a day or two after arriving at Clifton the regiment was sent with the 23d Corps down the river on transports and up the Ohio to Cincinnati, where it took passage with the rest of the corps over the Baltimore & Ohio R. R. to Washington City, where it went into camp at Stoneman Barracks. In a few days it marched to Alexandria, Va., and embarked on an ocean steamer for Fort Fisher on the coast of North Carolina. After several unsuccessful efforts to advance directly toward Wilmington, a force under Gen. Cox was sent by way of Smithville up the south side of Fear river. The 16th was with this command and engaged in severe fighting on the way. On one day the 16th had an all-day skirmish with the 2d South Carolina Cavalry, driving them on the road leading to Wilmington. The next day it took part in the victorious battle of Town Creek. On the 22d of February the gallant old regiment was the first of the Federal troops to enter the city of Wilmington, simultaneously with the evacuation of the place by the enemy. Remaining there several weeks as provost guards, it was ordered on the march and reached Kingston the second day; thence to Goldsborough, and arrived at Raleigh in time to take part in the review of Sherman's army by that general and Gen. Grant. A few days later it arrived at Greensburg and from thence marched to Company Shops, North Carolina, where it was mustered out of the military service June 1, 1865, and sent to Louisville, Ky., where it was paid off,

*The statement sometimes made of Opdycke's brigade alone saving the break in the center at Franklin is a gross error. That brigade did splendid work, but the day was saved by the united efforts of the men of Rugar's division, and the rallied men of Lane's and Conrad's brigades; Opdycke's men and Reilly's reserve line, as well as Reilly's rallied men. All under the personal direction of Gen. Cox.

and disbanded, having served nearly four years, and the entire time being on active, arduous duty.

Seventeenth Kentucky Infantry.

Col. John H. McHenry, of Owensboro, Ky., who raised this regiment, read an account of it before the Federal Historical Society March 2, 1882, and the following sketch is made up from that narrative, which covered the period from organization until November, 1862.

When President Lincoln called an extra session of Congress to meet July 4, 1861, a special election of Congressmen became necessary in Kentucky. This election was held June 20th, and James S. Jackson, of Hopkinsville, was elected from the Second District. Jackson had scarcely taken his seat when he resigned to enter the military service. He came back to Kentucky for that purpose, and John H. McHenry, being his personal friend and having had a military education at West Point, at once was associated with Jackson. It was soon arranged that several well-known Kentuckians, including themselves, would each recruit a regiment; Jackson a cavalry regiment, which became the 3rd; McHenry an infantry regiment, which became the 17th. Hawkins, of Warren, Burbridge, of Logan, and Shackelford, of Hopkins, were the others.

Col. McHenry says: "Great difficulty and even danger was experienced by recruiting officers in Western Kentucky in filling up their ranks. In many counties were numerous persons who desired to volunteer in the regiments then being formed for the Union army. They had no opportunity for doing so without fleeing to the north side of Green river. Leaving their homes and families unprotected, they would band together in squads, and with such arms as could be procured, cross the river at night and come hastily to the Union camps."

He says Col. Hawkins had assembled several companies on the south side of Green river, at Rochester, and he (McHenry) visited his camp early in September, his own camp being then at Hartford, Ohio county, and named Camp Calloway for a Revolutionary soldier who lived in that county. About September 11th Gen. S. B. Buckner came into the state, and Col. Hawkins made his way with his men to McHenry's camp at Hartford. A few days later they removed to Owensboro, and camp was established there; also one at Henderson and one at Calhoon. To these camps recruits came from all the adjacent counties to join as Col. McHenry says, "the various regiments that were being recruited by Jackson, Hawkins, Love, Burbridge, Shackelford, Bristow, Buckner, myself and others."

These camps were in constant apprehension of invasion from the Confederates who had established themselves in Kentucky, at Bowling Green, Russellville, Hopkinsville and other places. The camp at Hartford was particularly exposed by its advanced position. It was in no condition to cope with the enemy's troops, for it must be remembered that in the Confederate camps in Tennessee not only the Tennessee troops but a number of State Guard troops from Kentucky, with the arms of the State of Kentucky, had been organizing and drilling for many months previous, and the Kentucky Unionists were now taking their initial steps. From the day of enlistment these Unionists may be said to have entered into active service, and the 17th engaged the enemy at Big Hill near Morgantown, Ky., October 29, 1861.

Col. McHenry says: "Our regiments, still only partially organized, were concentrated at Calhoon in November, 1861, and placed under command of Gen. Thos. L. Crittenden, of Frankfort. They were the 11th Ky., Col. P. B. Hawkins; 17th Ky., Col. McHenry; 25th Ky., Col. J. M. Shackelford; 26th Ky., Col. S. G. Burbridge; 3rd Ky. Cav., Col. J. S. Jackson, and the 31st, 42d, 43rd and 44th Indiana, and a battery of artillery." Here the recruits suffered greatly from measles, colds and pneumonia, and many were so disabled that they were afterwards discharged.

They remained at Calhoon about two months. In January, 1862, four of these regiments were sent to join the command of Gen. Grant. They were transported by steamboats. They were the 17th and 25th Ky., 31st and 44th Indiana. Col. Cruft being the ranking officer, commanded them as a brigade. When the steamers reached Ft. Henry it had been captured. They at once went back down the Tennessee river and then up the Cumberland to Ft. Donelson. They reached that place in time to share in all the fighting that preceded the surrender.

Col. McHenry says: "As my regiment was disembarking, Gen. Grant, who was at the place, said, 'I have a big contract on hand, and will have some work for you and your regiment to-day or to-morrow, and I expect to hear a good report from the Kentuckians.'"

The next day they engaged in the fighting; Col. McHenry describes it as very severe. He says the lines of the armies were in full view of each other and in gunshot range for hours, it being the intention of Grant to draw his enemy out, and the intention of the others not to be drawn out. And the matter was determined by an assault by Grant's forces. During this engagement the attacking forces were exposed to severest weather.

At Donelson the 17th and 25th were in Gen. Lew Wallace's division. He says: "Col. Jas. M. Shackelford, 25th Ky., and Col. John H. McHenry, 17th Ky., and their field and company officers all won honor and lasting praise; nor can less be given to the valor and endurance of the men who composed their regiments." Col. Cruft compliments all who were in his brigade, saying all behaved well. Col. Shackelford in his report, says: "He led his men in the face of a most terrific fire." Col. McHenry described the fighting as a "terrible battle." The casualties of the 25th were fourteen killed and fifty-eight wounded; of the 17th four killed and thirty-four wounded.

After the fall of Donelson Grant's army moved to Pittsburg Landing. Arrangements were made at that time for the consolidation of the 17th and 25th Ky., and Col. J. M. Shackelford returned to Kentucky to raise another regiment. The 25th continued under command of Lieut. Col. B. H. Bristow (afterwards Secretary of the Treasury) until after the battle of Shiloh when the consolidation was consummated, April 13, 1862. These two regiments were closely associated in the battle of Shiloh, being in the same brigade under Brig. Gen. J. G. Lauman. Gen. Lauman in his report says the regiments in his brigade "fought from morning until night like veterans." Col. McHenry describes the 17th in line early Sunday morning, near the right of an open field in rear of a portion of the camp Gen. Prentiss had occupied. It first had to endure a terrible artillery fire, then a column of infantry attempted a left flank movement, and was driven back with dreadful loss. Fighting until cartridge boxes were exhausted, the regiment was moved to a new position, which it held until nearly sundown. He says: "About four o'clock, owing to the withdrawal of Lieut. Col. Bristow, who was wounded, and the wounding of Maj. Wall, of the 25th Ky., that regiment was turned over to me and the gallant officers and men acted with the same courage that had characterized them during the day." Capt. Morton, of the 17th, was mortally wounded. Capt. Robert Vaughan was wounded. He specially mentions Capt. Beckham, Lieuts. Kieth, Nall, Brown, Campbell, Bratcher, Ferguson, Little, Heston, and Adjt. Starling. The casualties were, one officer killed and two wounded; seventeen men killed and sixty-seven wounded.

On the 13th of April, 1862, the 25th Ky. was formally consolidated with the 17th, and under the latter designation continued during the remainder of their service. It moved with the army to Corinth and was engaged in severe skirmishing, lasting nearly all the night before the evacuation and it was with the first troops to enter the place. In the organization of the army of the Ohio, in April and May and the summer of 1862, the 17th was in Ammen's brigade, Nelson's division.

From Corinth it marched with Buell's army to Huntsville, Ala.; in June it was at Athens; in July at Pulaski and Reynolds' Station, Tenn. It was with Buell's army in the march to Louisville, being often near to Bragg's columns, and at the time of the battle of Perryville was in McCook's corps, Rousseau's division, Starkweathers' brigade. It was not in the battle of Perryville, having marched from Springfield that day, where it had been sent as train guard, and arrived on the field after the close of the engagement.

After the battle of Perryville the 17th followed Bragg's army as far as Livingston, Ky., and then was sent to Bowling Green and thence to Russellville, where, in Col. S. D. Bruce's brigade, it, with other troops, was employed in the protection of that part of the state during November and December, 1862. At this time Col. McHenry's connection with the regiment ceased.*

In December, the 17th was ordered to Clarksville, Tenn., where it remained until March, 1863, when it proceeded by steamboat to Nashville, Tenn. In April it was at Brentwood; in May at Murfreesboro; in June and July at McMinnville, and crossed the mountain to Pikeville. In the organization of Rosecrans' army, July 31, 1863, the 17th was in Crittenden's corps, VanCleve's division, Beatty's brigade, and it so remained until after the battle of Chickamauga, in which it was severely engaged both days. On the first day it assisted in capturing a battery which was sent to the rear.

In Gen. Crittenden's report of this battle he mentions three regiments, 44th Ind., 9th Ky., and 17th Ky., which rallied and formed on Snodgrass Hill on the right of the main line on the second day, and fighting all day, only left the field when ordered at 7:30 p. m. Gen. Thos. J. Wood mentions this fact in his report, and says the fact that these regiments preserved their formation and did not retire when other troops did, was most creditable.

Gen. Beatty, in the report of his brigade, says these regiments made a stand and held the hill by the most terrific fighting, until dark, when they withdrew by order and joined the army at Rossville. Col. Stout in his report describes the fighting of his regiment on the 19th and 20th. It was very severe both days; on the 19th Lieut. John D.

* He had issued to his regiment an order to deliver to their owners all slaves found in his lines. This order was read at Bloomfield, Ky. It was in conflict with the policy of the administration, and when it reached the eyes of the President an order was made dismissing him from the service. The order was received at Russellville, Ky., and for some hours there was great danger of mutiny in the camp. In fact, some of the men left for their homes, and nothing but a personal appeal from Col. McHenry himself quieted them. It was more their love and affection for him that affected them than interest in the subject.

Lieut. Col. Stout was promoted and commanded the regiment until its muster out.

Millman was killed and Capt. J. W. Anthony wounded. Lieut. Col. Robt. Vaughan was wounded on the 20th. On the 20th the 17th, with the other regiments, fought as has been mentioned. The casualties in this two-days' battle in the 17th were one officer killed, two wounded; five men killed, one hundred and three wounded, and fifteen missing. The fighting of the 17th is mentioned in the reports of many officers who were on the same part of the field.*

The 17th remained at Chattanooga until the 25th of November, when it participated in the battle of Missionary Ridge. It was in the grand assault made then, and Gen. Beatty especially complimented the work of Col. Stout and his men. Col. Stout says: "When the battalions in advance had advanced half way up the ascent, I advanced quickly, and had great difficulty in restraining officers and men in their ardor to reach the crest. Their enthusiasm, excited by the desire to reach the crest, and the tremendous cheering of our several lines, and the thundering of the guns on both sides knew no bounds. . . We reached the crest soon after the first flag had been planted on it, and while the balls of the enemy were flying thick around us."

After the battle of Missionary Ridge the 17th went with other troops into East Tennessee where it remained mov-

* Of the engagement on Snodgrass Hill, Col. Stout, in a letter, November 23, 1893, says: "I have always contended that the 17th Ky was the first to start the line, and the others came up and formed." In another letter, dated November 26, 1893, he says: "I lay great stress upon my statement that we were the first to form the new line upon the right of Thomas, almost at right angles with him. He (Gen. Walker) says that we were the first to raise our colors on the new line." Gen. M. B. Walker, who was then colonel of the 31st Ohio Volunteers and an officer in the regular army, was a member that day, of Gen Brannan's staff, in a letter, December 2, 1881, to Col. Stout, says: "You will remember that there was much confusion with the troops on the morning of the 20th of September, 1863. Your regiment was formed on the line with some of Gen. Brannan's, and some others, which did not belong to his division. For instance, the 21st Ohio Volunteer Infantry and, I think, the general meant to include both your regiment, the 17th Ky., and 21st Ohio, in his report, but he ought to have mentioned both regiments in the most honorable manner. I now say that your regiment, the 17th Ky., was the first organized body of troops on the new line on the hills on the morning of the 20th. I well remember that when your regiment came upon the first hill one of your captains was carrying your colors, and I directed him where to plant the colors, as a guide to the deployment I wanted you to make. I offered to take the flag in my hand to indicate the precise point I wanted it to occupy, but the captain would not allow me to take it out of his hand, but stepped forward with me and planted the staff, saying that the flag should not quit his living hand. Your regiment immediately deployed on the right, and there remained and fought as bravely as men ever did, through the entire battle of the day."

As early as July 4, 1878, Gen. Walker wrote to Col. Stout, saying: "Yours were the first colors on the new line, and they waved in grand defiance of the enemy all the day long, and until the unfortunate order to fall back came."

ing from place to place during the winter, being at Maryville, Knoxville, Strawberry Plains, Powder Spring, New Market and Dandridge. In April it was at Cleveland, May 4th at Catoosa Springs, and moved thence to take part in the Atlanta campaign, being in the 4th Corps, Wood's division, Beatty's brigade. May 7th, marched to Tunnell Hill, May 8th advanced and suffered loss at Rocky Face; also was engaged at Cassville, losing severely. There Capt. W. J. Landrum was killed and Lieut. C. A. Brasher badly wounded May 24th, at Altoona. May 27th fought at Pickett's Mills, where Capt. Thos. R. Brown was wounded; June 6th at Ackworth; June 17th Capt. R. C. Sturgis received a wound from which he died. Fighting was continuous throughout the campaign about Kennesaw, Dallas, Marietta and across the Chattahoochee. Then in the battles around Atlanta, and in the movement to Jonesboro and Lovejoy's south of Atlanta. Col. Stout says in his report: "During the campaign the regiment made twenty-seven lines of strong defensive works and many slight lines and barricades. . . . The loss was one officer killed, four wounded, seven men killed, and eighty-three wounded." He compliments the officers and men of the regiment for their conduct.

After the fall of Atlanta, the 17th moved with Sherman's army in the pursuit of Hood, spending the entire month of October, 1864, marching through the northern part of Georgia, still being with the 4th Army Corps. When Sherman prepared to march to the sea, November, 1864, he sent the 4th Corps and 23d Corps to Nashville to serve under Gen. Thomas against Hood's army. The 17th Ky. went with the 4th Corps and in November was at Pulaski, Tenn., the 4th and 23d Corps being under Gen. Schofield. From Pulaski the troops fell back to Columbia, then to Spring Hill, then to Franklin, where the battle was fought November 30th. The 17th participated in all the movements and engagements of this campaign. After the battle of Franklin it was ordered to Louisville, where it was mustered out of service January 23, 1865. Few regiments had a record equal to that of the 17th Ky. It had more than three years of service in the field, and participatd in six of the greatest battles of the war, and an untold number of smaller engagements.

The following statistics of the 17th Ky. are taken from the official records at Washington:

Total enlistments		1,473
Killed in battle or died of wounds received	135
Wounded in action	363
Died in hospital, prison and by accidents, etc.	163
Total fatalities		661

Of the officers of this regiment it may be mentioned that Col. Stout was breveted Brig. General. He was a lawyer and died in 1895 in Chicago, where he located after the war. Lieut. Col. Vaughan became a business man in Louisville, where he now resides. Lieut. Col. I. B. Nall is a resident of Louisville, where he has been for twenty years engaged in newspaper editorial work. He served continuously through the war. Not only with the regiment, but also upon the staff of Generals Cruft, Beatty and Wood. Faithful as a soldier he has made one of Louisville's most prominent and useful citizens. Major Wall was a prominent lawyer and died in Owensboro soon after the war. Major Calhoon is leading a useful life in the lower Green river section. Major Claggett removed to the Northwest and became prominent as a lawyer, but died several years ago. Adjt. Ritter practiced law in Hopkinsville until his death. Adjt. Starling became colonel of the 35th Ky. regiment. Adjt. Gist was in the government service in Washington for several years. Surgeon Burgess lives in Illinois at a ripe old age.

Of Company A, Capt. Morton was a most excellent soldier. His company was the first recruited in the Green river section and was on its way to Camp Dick Robinson when overtaken by a message from Col. McHenry asking him to return and become the nucleus of the 17th regiment. Capt. Morton was killed at Shiloh. Capt. Cox is a banker in Hartford and one of its best citizens.

Of Company B, Capt. Frank H. Bristow has served several terms as county judge of Todd county. Lieut. Shelby Hicks is a prominent citizen of Owensboro and has been in the revenue service at different times.

Of Company E, T. W. Campbell became Lieut. Col. of the 17th Ky. Cavalry.

One of the first acts of the new recruits of the 17th was the disarming of the State Guard company at Hartford, which was done by Col. McHenry on the first demonstration of its purpose to side with the Confederacy. A conflict between the 17th and the State Guard in the streets was narrowly averted.

Eighteenth Kentucky Infantry.

(FROM THE ADJUTANT GENERAL'S REPORT.)

The following account, evidently prepared by an officer of the regiment, is here used with emendation.

The 18th Regiment of Kentucky Volunteer Infantry was recruited during the winter of 1861-2, and was mustered into the United States service on the 8th day of February, 1862. During its organization and until August 20, 1862, the command was on duty guarding the Covington & Lexington railroad, with its headquarters at Falmouth, Ky., until April 16, 1862, and then at Lexington, Ky. On the 16th day of June, 1862, a detachment of the regiment, under command of Lieut. Col. Landram, participated in the defense of Cynthiana, Ky., against John H. Morgan, where it sustained a loss of two killed.

On the 20th day of August, 1862, the regiment, about six hundred strong, marched from Lexington, Ky., for Richmond, twenty-six miles, a portion of the regiment remaining on duty on the Kentucky Central railroad. The 18th was attached to the brigade of Maj. Gen. C. M. Clay, who was afterward relieved by Brig. Gen. Cruft.

On August 30, 1862, it participated in the battle of Richmond, Ky., losing fifty-two killed, one hundred and fifteen wounded and almost the entire remainder of the command captured and paroled. Among the killed were Captains Lewis, Company H, and Culbertson, Company K, and Lieutenants Washburn, Company F, and Dunlap, Company I. Among the wounded and captured were Col. W. A. Warner, Lieut. Col. J. J. Landram, Capt. M. Mullins, and W. R. Fisk, and Lieutenants Patterson and Moss.

After the battle of Richmond the remnant of the regiment, under command of Maj. F. G. Bracht, retreated to Louisville, Ky., one hundred and twenty-six miles. On September 28th it left Louisville, by boat, for Covington, Ky., where it was assigned to the brigade of Brig. Gen. Green Clay Smith, and marched from Covington to Paris, Ky., eighty miles. On December 5th it marched from Paris to Lexington, twenty miles. On January 27, 1863, it left Lexington by rail for Louisville, Maj. H. K. Milward commanding. On February 2, 1863, it left Louisville by boat for Nashville, Tenn., where, upon its arrival, it was assigned to the brigade of Brig. Gen. Crook. On February 23, 1863, it started by boat for Carthage, whence it marched on June 2d for Murfreesboro (via Liberty) seventy-five miles, where Crook's brigade was made the 3d Brigade, 4th Division, 14th Army Corps. On June 23, 1863, it moved with the Army of the Cumberland, and took part in the engagement at Hoover's Gap, losing two killed and three wounded. It was actively engaged in the campaign against Chattanooga. On September 19th and 20th it participated in the battle of Chickamauga, losing eight killed and forty wounded and thirty-eight prisoners. Among the wounded were Maj. A. G. Wileman and Lieut. J. M. Shaw. Among the captured were Captains J. M. Grose and B. T. Riggs. * When the army was reorganized after the battle of Chickamauga, the 18th was assigned to the 3d Brigade, 3d Division, 14th Army Corps.

From October 5th to November 23, 1863, it was on special duty, holding the line of the river near Chattanooga at a point known as "The Narrows," and at "Brown's Ferry," on which duty it lost in killed, one, and captured, five. After the battle of Mission Ridge it was ordered to Chattanooga on post duty. On January 5, 1864, of three hundred men present, two hundred and seventy-two reenlisted as veteran volunteers, and the command was ordered to Louisville, Ky., by rail, to receive veteran furlough. On February 1st it received thirty days' furlough at Louisville, Ky., and at the expiration of the same, on March 1st, it rendezvoused at Paris, Ky., and on March 12th it started by rail for Nashville, Tenn., whence it marched on the 22d for Ringgold, Ga., a distance of two hundred miles, to join the main army. On May 10th it was left at Ringgold on post duty when the army moved against Atlanta. Here it had several skirmishes, in one of which Capt. J. B. Heltemus was captured.

On September 25, 1864, the regiment left Ringgold, Ga., by rail, for Atlanta, and on October 3d it marched from Atlanta (northward, in pursuit of J. B. Hood), to Galesville, Ala., one hundred and fifty miles. On October 29th it broke up camp at Galesville, and, after halting at Rome, to be paid off, it marched to Atlanta, which place was reached on November 15th, a distance of one hundred and one miles. On November 16th it marched southward. Little can be said of the march to Savannah; one day was very much like another; occasionally a swamp was to be crossed, a bad road repaired, or a stream bridged; and there was quite an extent of railroad track destroyed. Only once (on December 2, 1864, at Rocky Creek Church) was the 3d Division, 14th Army Corps, under fire, and then sustained no loss. On December 14th the regiment arrived in front of Savannah, having marched from Atlanta, a distance of two hundred and fifty-seven miles. On the 22d the camp was moved to the immediate vicinity of Savannah, the enemy having evacuated the city. Here Capt. Sam Williams, Company B, died on January 14, 1865.

On January 20, 1865, it left Savannah, and moved northward, arriving at "Sisters' Ferry" on the Savannah river, on January 28th, a distance of forty miles. On February 5th it crossed the river into South Carolina.

The march from this point to Goldsboro, N. C., was terrible; mud and mire, wide swamps and deep rivers were plentiful and the luxuries of life accessible only under difficulties. The first intelligence of the "outer world" was obtained at Fayetteville, N. C., March 11, 1865, at which time the distance marched from Sisters' Ferry was four hundred miles.

On March 18th it marched from Fayetteville for Goldsboro, N. C., a distance of sixty miles where, on the 4th day of April, 1865, the non-veterans, seventy-two in number, were mustered out, the veterans and recruits being transferred to the 18th Ky. Veteran Volunteer Infantry.

From that period the regiment was known as the 18th Ky. Veteran Volunteer Infantry. April 10, 1865, it participated in the movement of the army against Raleigh, N. C. On the 12th it was engaged, sustaining a loss of two killed and two wounded; and, on the 13th, entered Raleigh. From thence it marched to Holly Springs, N. C., where it went into camp on the 16th. On the 29th of April it started homeward, and reached Washington City (a distance of three hundred and sixty miles) on the 19th of May. During this march the 3d Division, 14th Army Corps, to which the regiment was attached, marched the distance from Raleigh to Richmond, Va. (one hundred and eighty-six miles), in six days.

The regiment remained at Washington City nearly a month, and was in the grand review. From Washington it went by railroad and steamboats to Louisville, Ky., where, early in July, 1865, a portion was mustered out.

Lieut. Col. H. K. Milward was commissioned colonel of the 18th Veteran Infantry by the governor of Kentucky, December 19, 1863, but was never mustered as such by reason of the regiment not having the requisite number of men. He commanded the regiment from January 20, 1863, to the date of its muster out, and was brevetted colonel by the President, to date March 13, 1865.

The regiment was mustered out at Louisville July 18, 1865.

Nineteenth Kentucky Infantry.

(FROM THE ADJUTANT-GENERAL'S REPORT.)

The following account, which was written by an officer of the 19th, is used just as it appears in the adjutant-general's report. In connection with it reference is here made to the accounts of the 7th and 22d Infantry.

The 19th Kentucky Infantry was recruited and organized at Harrodsburg, Ky., in the fall of 1861, by Col. Wm. J. Landram, and Lieut. Col. John Cowan, and was mustered into the United States service on the 2d day of January, 1862, by Capt. H. C. Bankhead, United States mustering officer. From Harrodsburg the regiment marched to Somerset, Ky., in January, 1862, and was engaged for some time in destroying the entrenchments of Gen. Zollicoffer, and collecting property captured at the battle of Mill Springs. The regiment marched from Somerset to Cumberland Ford, Ky., in April, 1862, and was assigned to Gen. Baird's brigade of Gen. George W. Morgan's division. It remained at Cumberland Ford until June, when it took part in the movements which resulted in the capture of Cumberland Gap, and assisted in the construction of the fortifications at that point. The Gap was evacuated in September, 1862, by the Federal forces, who marched through the mountains of Eastern Kentucky to the Ohio river, occupying over twenty days. Upon this march the troops suffered much for want of food, subsisting chiefly upon meal grated upon the bottoms of their mess pans. (See 7th Ky. Infantry.)

At the termination of the Cumberland Gap campaign the 19th was assigned to the division of the Army of Kentucky, commaned by Brig. Gen. A. J. Smith, and composed part of the 2d Brigade under command of Col. Landram. It marched by way of Louisville, Ky., to Memphis, Tenn., and formed part of Maj. Gen. Sherman's army which moved on Vicksburg via Chickasaw Bayou. It participated in the battle of Chickasaw Bluffs, December 29, 1862, and acquitted itself with credit. From Chickasaw Bayou it proceeded to Arkansas Post, and participated in the battle which resulted in the capture of that place on the 10th of January, 1863. It returned from Arkansas Post to Young's Point, La., where it remained for some time.

On the 15th of April, 1863, the regiment marched down the east bank of the Mississippi river and crossed to the rear of Vicksburg, participating in the battles of Port

Gibson, Champion Hills, Black River Bridge, and the sieges of Vicksburg and Jackson. Of the conduct of the regiment at Port Gibson, the brigade commander mentions in his official report the undaunted bravery and gallantry in the following terms:

"The 19th Ky. Infantry advanced under a heavy fire to within sixty yards of the enemy's lines, where they returned the fire with such coolness and accuracy, for about two hours, as to silence the fire in their front, capturing twenty-five or thirty prisoners, and cutting to pieces the 5th (rebel) Mo. regiment."

The regiment was commanded in this engagement, as well as the others mentioned, by Lieut. Col. John Cowan, (Col. Landram being in command of a brigade), who is uniformly spoken of by his superior officers in terms of the highest praise. In the assault on Vicksburg, on the 22d of May, the 19th lost about sixty in killed and wounded. Among the killed was that gallant officer, Maj. Morgan V. Evans, who fell in front of his men nobly doing his duty. This regiment was among the few Kentucky organizations that took part in the capture of Vicksburg, and in the numerous battles incident thereto, and is favorably mentioned by Maj. Gen. McClernand, commanding the 13th Army Corps, in the following congratulatory letter to Gov. Robinson, viz.:

"Headquarters 13th Army Corps,
"Near Vicksburg, June, 5, 1863.

"Governor: I have the honor to inform you that there are two general officers and three regiments, the 7th, 19th and 22d Ky. in the 13th Army Corps, Department of the Tennessee, under my command, who crossed the Mississippi river with me at Bruensburg, below Grand Gulf, on the 30th day of April, and who took part in the battles of Thompson's Hill on the 1st of May, Champion Hills on the 16th, Big Black Bridge on the 17th of May, and at Vicksburg, beginning on the 19th of May and continuing up to the present time.

"I am most happy to congratulate you, and through you your noble state, for the victories won by the common effort of her brave sons with those of sister states, and to bear testimony to the gallantry, bravery and good conduct of her officers and men in all these bloody struggles. They bore themselves with the unflinching steadiness of veterans, both under galling fires of artillery and musketry, and in making charges upon fortified lines. They have shown themselves compeers and fit companions in arms with brave men of sister states in a series of battles, in which it has become impossible to make particular mention of those who distinguished themselves, without mentioning individually both officers and men.

"Your most obedient servant,
"John A. McClernand,
"Maj. Gen. Com'dg 13th Army Corps, Department of the Tennessee."

After the siege of Jackson the 19th Ky. Infantry, being in the 13th Army Corps, was transferred to the Department of the Gulf, and was with Gen. Banks on the unfortunate "Red river campaign." At the battle of Sabine Crossroads, La., it was assigned to the 1st Brigade of the 4th Division, commanded by Col. Landram. In this battle the 19th Ky. repelled five distinct charges before the enemy was enabled to break through its lines; and the corps commander, Gen. Ransom, says, "They all did nobly, and their list of killed and wounded bears evidence of the obstinacy with which they resisted the overwhelming force of the enemy." After the Red river expedition it returned to Baton Rouge, La., where it remained until ordered to Louisville, Ky., where it was mustered out January 26, 1865, the veterans and recruits being transferred to the 7th Ky. Veteran Infantry.

In 1865 Col. W. J. Landram was made a brigadier-general. A brief biographical sketch of this officer appears on page 69 of this work.

Twentieth Kentucky Infantry.

A portion of this regiment was recruited at Lexington, Ky., by Col. Sanders D. Bruce, who was captain of the State Guard companies, called the "Chasseurs." Another portion was recruited at Camp Dick Robinson, and another at Smithland, Ky., by R. K. Williams and Thos. B. Waller. The two first-named bodies assembled at Lexington in the fall of 1861, and from thence went by rail to Louisville, from which place they proceeded by steamboat to Smithland, where they united with the men who had been recruited there. The regiment was mustered into the service at Smithland, January 6, 1862. It was then ordered to Louisville by steamer, and from thence it marched to Bardstown, where it encamped a short time.

The fall of Fort Donelson in February led to the concentration of the forces under Gen. Buell at Nashville.

and the 20th marched from Bardstown to Nashville. It was at that time brigaded with the 1st and 2d Ky. Infantry, and the brigade was commanded by Col. S. D. Bruce. At Nashville the brigade was assigned to Nelson's division, Col. Bruce commanding the brigade and Lieut. Col. Chas. S. Hanson commanding the regiment. It was brigaded with the 1st and 2d Ky. Infantry and 31st Ind. Infantry. From Nashville the 20th marched to Pittsburg Landing with Buell's army, and took part in the second day's battle of Shiloh. Gen. Nelson, in his report, says that he got his division over by 9 o'clock p. m., April 6th, which was the night of the first day's battle, and at 4 a. m. next morning moved against the enemy. Bruce's brigade was the center of his division. His progress was steadily successful all day in driving the enemy. Col. Bruce says, in the report of his brigade, that while the 1st Ky. Infantry was sustaining a galling fire of grape and canister, the 20th was ordered to support it, which it did under a very severe fire. "Both these regiments," says he, "deserve the highest commendation for the manner in which they executed their orders."

Col. Hanson, who led the 20th, mentions this in his report and speaks of the destructive fire the regiment was under. "Though it moved in good order and maintained its positions with steadiness and coolness." He also says the regiment was deployed as skirmishers, and drove the enemy; that it supported Capt. Ferrell's battery, and resisted attacks, acting throughout the day "with a gallantry worthy of veterans."

From Shiloh the 20th moved with the army to Corinth, and in the siege of that place was engaged in numerous skirmishes, one of which rose to the dignity of a battle, being the affair at the widow Surratt's house, where Bruce's brigade was engaged. Of this fight Col. Sedgewick, who commanded the 2d Ky., says, in his report:

"Lieut. Col. Hanson, Maj. Buckner and Adjt. Brennan, of the 20th Ky., evinced the greatest bravery, gallantly leading and encouraging their men amid the greatest danger." Gen. Manson also commends the 20th in his report.

The 20th marched with Buell's army from Corinth to Northern Alabama, being at Huntsville and other points, and thence to McMinnville and other points in Tennessee. In August it began to move with Buell to Kentucky, and marched with Nelson's division from Louisville to Perryville. It was engaged in the skirmishing of that battle October 8th, and then moved in pursuit of Bragg, going as far as Mt. Vernon. It then marched through Somerset and Glasgow to Nashville. It remained there until in the month of December, when it was ordered to Bowling Green. Going to that place, it was employed in guarding the railroad at various points until about the first of July, when it was sent to Lebanon, Ky. It was there under command of Lieut. Col. Charles S. Hanson when Morgan entered Kentucky on his celebrated raid of July, 1863.

Col. Hanson was attacked, and after a most heroic defense, overpowered and compelled to surrender.

The misfortune which overtook the 20th at Lebanon, Ky., July 5, 1863, requires special mention. Col. Hanson says, in his report, that he was garrisoning Lebanon with 360 men and officers of the 20th and some recruits under Col. B. J. Spaulding, in all 380. The place was attacked by Morgan's command of several thousand, being the force with which he was making his raid, which extended into Indiana and Ohio. It was useless for 380 men to contend with such a force, but Col. Hanson refused to surrender, and Morgan threw shells into the town.

Col. Hanson says the message was then sent to him by citizens of the place that unless he surrendered in ten minutes the town would be burned and no quarter shown. This, however did not accomplish the object, and the fighting continued until Col. Hanson's men had exhausted their ammunition, having fired 125 rounds to the man, he was compelled to surrender.

Col. Hanson specially mentions in his report the conduct of Maj. Waller, Captains Wolcott, McLeod, Parrish, Musselman, Brennan, Dunn, Gapen, Gilem and West, and Lieutenants Hale, Guess, Young, Attersall, Northcutt, Cole, Thornbough and Sternberg.

Col. Hanson's loss was three killed and sixteen wounded. The prisoners taken by Morgan were paroled and he moved on toward Bardstown. The 20th then being without arms, went by direction of Gen. Boyle to Camp Nelson.

The estimate of this affair at Lebanon is shown by the mention made of it in the reports of other officers. Maj. Gen. Hartsuff, who commanded the 23d Army Corps at that time, commended, "in the warmest terms, the officers and soldiers of the 20th Ky., under Lieut. Col. C. S. Hanson, who, at Lebanon for six hours, sustained a most unequal contest, only yielding when entirely surrounded, and the town was being burned over their heads, and further resistance impossible."

Gen. Shackelford also, in his report, says, when he reached Campbellsville pursuing Morgan, he "there heard of the noble defense of Lebanon by Col. Hanson and his regiment, and his surrender to the overwhelming numbers of the enemy."

The captors of the 20th were themselves pursued by the Kentucky regiments, under the command of Gens. Shackelford and Hobson, and compelled to surrender, about three weeks later, on the far side of the state of Ohio.

July 28th, Gen. Fry, at Camp Nelson, received orders to arm the 20th Ky. and put it on duty. The regiment was ordered to Louisville, where it remained on provost duty until it was ordered to the front, May 15, 1864. It then joined Sherman's army in Georgia. Maj. Waller, in his report, says his regiment was placed in Strickland's brigade of Hascall's division, 23d Army Corps, May 30, 1864, and that from that day until the capture of Atlanta it was in all the movements, battles and skirmishes of that great campaign, fighting at Dallas, Acworth, Kennesaw, Peach Tree creek and many other places of less note. Col. Strickland, in his report, commends the soldierly conduct of the men and officers of the 20th.

After the Atlanta campaign the 20th was ordered to Kentucky, with orders to report to Gen. Hugh Ewing. It was in his command November and December, 1864, a portion of the time being at Louisville on guard duty. It was mustered out of service January 17, 1865, at Louisville, and its veterans and recruits were transferred to the 6th Ky. Cavalry. Col. Sanders D. Bruce was in command of a brigade, and was kept on duty in Kentucky during the greater part of his service. Since the war he lived in New York, being the proprietor of the paper, "Turf, Field and Farm."

Lieut. Col. Hanson was a brother of Gen. Roger Hanson, of the Confederate army, who was killed at Murfreesboro. In December, 1863, he was commissioned colonel of the 37th Ky. Infantry, and was severely wounded and captured on the expedition to the Salt Works, in Virginia, September, 1864.

Capt. Clinton J. True became colonel of the 40th Ky. Maj. Ben F. Buckner, since the war, has become a distinguished lawyer and judge, and resides at Winchester, Ky.

Twenty-First Kentucky Infantry.

(CONDENSED FROM GEN. PRICE'S MORE EXTENDED ACCOUNT PREPARED FOR THE FEDERAL HISTORICAL SOCIETY.)

The excitement of the war found a number of well-equipped military companies in Kentucky. They had reached a certain esprit de corps by the organization of the "State Guard" under Gen. S. B. Buckner. The four Lexington companies which were in the regiment commanded by Roger W. Hanson were "The Chasseurs," S. D. Bruce, who soon became the colonel of the 20th Ky. Infantry; "The Rifles," Capt. John H. Morgan; "Lexington Grays," Capt. Robt. J. Breckinridge, and "Old Infantry," Capt. S. W. Price, who soon became colonel of the 21st Ky. Infantry.

The "Old Infantry" had an interesting history; it antedated the war of 1812, and served in that war at the Battle of the River Raisin, under Capt. Hart, and in the Mexican war under Cassius M. Clay. Its captaincy was a post of honor.

Discord appeared in the "State Guard," when it appeared that there was an effort to identify it with a movement to carry Kentucky into the Confederacy. One plan in this direction was to establish encampments in different parts of the state. In May, 1861, Hanson encamped his regiment near Lexington. It was composed of companies from Lexington, Cynthiana, Paris, Winchester and Frankfort.

There was an effort to conceal the real intention, but it was too manifest; one evidence was the removal of the National guidons from the camp, and refusal to pay honor to Maj. Robert Anderson, when he was expected to pass through Lexington shortly after the fall of Sumpter. Immediately after this encampment Captains Price and D. W. Lindsey withdrew from the "State Guard" with their companies, though threatened with arrest, and entered the Home Guard organization, which became the nucleus of the fast arming patriotism of the state. The first approach to a conflict was occasioned by the threat to prevent the Unionists from taking possession of certain arms and ammunition sent them by the Federal government. Gen. Buckner, with a portion of the "State Guard," equipped with state arms, had already committed himself to the Confederacy. John Morgan was known to be organizing for that purpose. The Unionists were compelled to ask arms and ammunition from the Federal government. To prevent interference with the transmission of these arms through Lexington to Camp Dick Robinson, Col. T. E. Bramlette was sent from that camp to Lexington with a small mounted force, and with the assistance of Capt. S. D. Bruce, with his "Chasseurs," and Capt. Price with his "Old Infantry," both under command of Col. E. L. Dudley, opposition was frustrated. Excitement was intense, but a contest was avoided by discretion on the one part and firmness on the other. The Federal government had made its call for troops, Col. Dudley responded and was commissioned to recruit a regiment. Capt. Price joined him with "Old Infantry" almost to a man. Then consolidating with a fragment of a regiment raised by Lieut. Col. B. A. Wheat in Green, Metcalfe and adjoining counties. The 21st Ky. Infantry was formed and mustered into service at Green River Bridge, December 31, 1861, and January 2, 1862.

Col. Dudley unfortunately died and the regiment was thrown into some confusion in consequence. Without solicitation Capt. Price was appointed colonel. He at once saw the necessity for removal of the regiment from that section, and at his request an order came to proceed to Creelsboro, on the Cumberland river, where it went on board transports and was conveyed to Nashville, March 18, 1862, the day Gen. Buell began his march from Nashville to Pittsburg Landing.

The regiment went into camp and spent several weeks getting the absentees and organizing.

April 1st the regiment started for Columbia, Tenn., to report to Gen. Negley. It reached that place the next day. From Columbia it marchd to Shelbyville, April 24th, where Col. Price took command of the post.

June 11th the 21st proceeded with other troops to Mc-Minnville, forty miles distant, and the enemy retiring, pursuit was made as far as Cumberland mountain. Here an incident occurred which may be related. Gen. Dumont, who was in command, had stationed guards at the wells with orders that the water was only to be used for headquarters and cavalry horses; the exasperation of the soldiers was great and Col. Price boldly informed Gen. Dumont that if the guard was not removed he would order up his regiment and remove them by force; to prevent trouble, the guards were removed. In a day or two the troops returned to McMinnville. June 17th, the 21st and 8th Ky. Infantry and 4th Ky. Cavalry and a Tennessee battery, all under Col. Price, proceeded to Wartrace. From thence the 21st returned to Shelbyville. July 2d, marched to Tullahoma, thence to Duck River Bridge.

July 15th, the 21st was assigned to the 23rd brigade, Nelson's division, at that time at Murfreesboro. In a few days it went with other troops on a fruitless expedition to intercept Morgan, at Lebanon, Tenn.

These early movements of the regiment served to discipline it for more serious work which followed.

Bragg's invasion of Kentucky occurring, the 21st entered upon the long march with Buell's army and reached Louisville, Ky., September 19th. In the reorganization of the army which took place it was assigned to VanCleve's division, in Crittenden's corps. October 1st, the 21st moved with the army in the direction of Bardstown, from Mt. Washington to Lebanon, and thence to Perryville. Crittenden's corps was not taken into the fight, though it was in line near enough to be exposed to shells. The 21st moved with the forces pursuing Bragg as far as London and Wildcat; it then marched through Somerset, Columbia, Glasgow, Scottsville and Gallatin to Silver Spring, Tenn., where it went into camp with Crittenden's corps.

On the 9th of December the 21st was engaged in a severe fight at Dobbin's Ford. Col. Matthews, commanding the brigade to which the 21st belonged, successfully engaging Wheeler's command, driving it from the field. Col. Matthews reported that every man in the brigade had behaved handsomely, and Gen. Rosecrans issued the following field order:

"The general commanding takes this method of complimenting the following non-commissioned officers and privates of the 21st Ky. Vol. Infantry for their gallant conduct in the skirmish near Dobbin's Ford on the 9th: Sergt. J. F. Morton, Company F; Corpl. Henry Stahl, Company A; Corpl. J. P. Hagan, Company F; Privates Geo. P. Mountjoy, Company A; Cassius Kiger, Company A;

Edward Welch, Company A; Wm. Murphy, Company A; E. B. Chinn, Company F; W. W. Oliver, CompanyF; John Morton, CompanyF; B. S. Jones, Company F."

Soon after this engagement Col. Price took command of the brigade and retained it until after the battle of Stone's River. In this great battle, December 21st, the 21st performed its full duty. Gen. Price in his account of his regiment says of one point in the engagement:

Expecting the enemy would attempt to cross the river, Col. Price posted the 8th Ky. as sharpshooters to command the ford behind a picket fence below the bank of the river, in order to prevent the success of such an effort. While he was performing this duty a messenger was dispatched to him with instructions to return to where the rest of the brigade was stationed, as Gen. Rosecrans wished to see him. There the general said to him:

"Col. Price, you command here, do you?"
"Yes, sir."
"Well, sir, will you hold this ford?"
"I will die in the attempt."
"That won't do, sir; will you hold this ford?"
"I will, sir."

He made good his word, and successfully prevented the enemy crossing.

January 2, 1863, the 21st was also engaged. At 3 o'clock the enemy, under Gen. Breckinridge, in whose command was Gen. Roger Hanson's brigade, advanced against a position held by Col. Price's brigade, and after several charges forced it from its position, but taking another, held it, and by the aid of the celebrated artillery fire from the fifty-eight Federal guns, succeeded in defeating the determined advance of the Confederates. The loss of the 21st was sixty killed and wounded. Among them was Lieut. S. Stone, Company G, killed; Maj. W. W. Dowden and Capt. S. B. Sharrard, Company C, wounded.

After the battle of Stone's River, the regiment remained inactive for some time at Murfreesboro.

In June, 1863, the movements began which led to the advance on Chattanooga, culminating in the battle of Chickamauga.

Bragg was pressed back from Shelbyville to Tullahoma, August 16th. Price's brigade reached McMinnville September 1st; it moved to Pikeville and down the Sequatchie valley and joined the corps at Shell Mound, September 6th. September 6th, the corps (Crittenden's) moved to Lookout valley in front of Sand mountain. There the 21st was placed in position near Whiteside Station; the other forces moved on and fought the battle of Chickamauga, while the 21st was left at that place. The roar of the fighting was distinctly heard but no orders came to move, and when the battle was over the 21st found itself in a perilous situation. Col. Price seeing the necessity for removal, determined to cross the river by Kelly's Ferry. He had scarcely done so when the enemy appeared in large force, but the 21st made its way to Chattanooga, and rejoined the brigade. When Gen. Rosecrans heard of the incident, he exclaimed, "Is it possible that regiment has been all this while at that place when I needed troops so much at Chickamauga!"

October 1st, the 21st was dispatched to Sequatchie valley, and near Anderson's Gap had a spirited engagement with Wheeler's cavalry, consisting of three brigades. The single regiment could only defend itself under such circumstances, which it did with complete success. Col. Price in his report says: "I can not cite special instances of gallantry when all acted with so much bravery and coolness. I can not close this report, however, without special mention of Lieut. Col. James C. Evans and Capt. W. R. Milward, acting field officers on the occasion. They deserve great credit for coolness and judgment in handling the men in action, and the skillful manner in which the little band of patriots were extricated from the web of the enemy, which was thickening around them."

After this fight the regiment encamped on a mountain overlooking Sequatchie valley, where it remained until November 19th. At this point in Col. Price's narrative he details his meeting Gen. Grant, who was on his way to take charge at Chattanooga. Col. Price was returning to his camp from Chattanooga and half way up the mountain met an officer walking with crutches, making his way in advance of his led horse. Col. Price was riding a spirited horse and as the road was narrow he dismounted to pass the pedestrian. Soon after passing he learned that the officer was Gen. Grant.

November 19th, the 21st was assigned to the first brigade of Gen. Jeff C. Davis; the regiment found Davis' division on the north side of the Tennessee river. November 24th, the division crossed on a pontoon bridge just below Chickamauga river, to take part in the battle of Missionary Ridge. It fought in that battle on the right of Gen. Sherman's command. It participated in several charges, driving the enemy each time, and captured two siege guns, a number of prisoners, and a large amount of stores. The loss of the regiment was ten wounded. The next day the enemy was pursued to Graysville, and to within two miles of Ringgold.

The 21st was then sent with the division to the relief of Burnside at Knoxville. On the 28th it passed McDan-iel's Gap; crossed the Hiawasse at Charleston; arrived at Loudon, December 4th. Reaching Maryville, it was ordered to return to Chattanooga, where it arrived December 18th, having marched two hundred and fifty miles.

Gen. Jeff C. Davis said of the 21st Ky.:

"This regiment (21st Ky.), served under my command during the battle of Mission Ridge, and in the subsequent pursuit of the enemy to Ringgold, Ga. At Chickamauga Station it was the first regiment to engage the enemy, where its gallantry and discipline was so conspicuous as to attract the admiration of the whole division, and such as to elicit special notice in my subsequent report of operations. This regiment also accompanied me in the campaign to Knoxville and back. The hardships and privations endured by the troops on this march called forth the highest qualities of the soldier. No regiment exhibited a higher state of discipline and efficiency in the whole army than the 21st Ky. Infantry."

In the organization of the forces commanded by Gen. Thomas the 21st was in Whitaker's brigade, Stanley's division, 4th Corps. At Shell Mound, Tenn., about three-fourths of the regiment, under Col. Price, re-enlisted in the veteran organization, January 11, 1864.

After the veteran furlough the men reassembled at Louisville, March 30, 1864, and proceeded to Cleveland, Tenn. April 26th, it went to Blue Springs. May 6th, it marched to Tunnell Hill, there joining Gen. Sherman's army for the Atlanta campaign. It began the continuous fighting of the summer at Resaca. On the 18th it was at Kingston, where it was engaged. It was also at Dallas and Burnt Hickory, New Hope church and Nose creek, and many other places where the fighting raged.

The severest experience on this celebrated campaign was in front of Kennesaw mountain. It participated in that charge, and among those who were stricken down was Col. Price, he being borne from the field. Maj. Hoskins took charge of the regiment.

This terminated Col. Price's active service in the field. Upon his partial recovery in the fall he was assigned to duty as post commander at Lexington, Ky., and continued in command until the close of the war, with the rank of brigadier-general. Lieut. Col. Evans assumed command of the regiment.

After the Atlanta campaign the regiment marched with the 4th Corps in the pursuit of Hood in Northern Georgia, throughout the month of October, 1864. The 4th Corps was then sent to Nashville to co-operate with the 23d Corps and other troops under Gen. Thomas against the movement of Hood in Tennessee. The 4th and 23d Corps were sent to Pulaski, Tenn., under Gen Schofield, the 21st Ky. being in Kimball's division, Whittaker's brigade. Hood moving to Columbia, the troops under Schofield fell back to that place. Hood then attempted to get in rear of Schofield by a move to Spring Hill. The 21st was with the troops that prevented the occupation of Spring Hill November 29th. The next day the 21st was in the battle of Franklin, being with Kimball's division of the 4th Corps, which was in position on the right of the defensive line. The attack fell upon the 4th corps to some extent, and it was fiercely engaged. The battle lasted about one hour and was very destructive to Hood's army. When it was over the Federal troops moved out of the line they had defended, crossed the river and marched to Nashville.

December 15th and 16th the battle of Nashville took place. In this battle the 21st fought both days, being in Whittaker's brigade, Kimball's division, 4th Corps. In the report of Gen Whittaker, he says his brigade assaulted and carried a fortified hill, driving the enemy from the position. Of the final and grand assault of the second day he says: "I directed my brigade to storm the enemy's works in my front. This order met with the most cordial approval of Gen. Kimball, division commander, who came up as my troops were beginning to move. With alacrity and gallantry unsurpassed the storming column, composed of the 51st Ohio, 45th Ohio, 21st Ky., and 96th Ills., advanced through an open cornfield for 400 or 500 yards, under a terrific fire of shell, canister and musketry. Nothing could impede the boldness and energy of the attack, and in a few minutes their works, six pieces of artillery, 600 stand of arms and 400 or 500 prisoners were ours. Many of the enemy were killed and wounded and the survivors not captured fled precipitately in great disorder." In this battle Lieut. Hugh A. Hedges was killed by a solid shot while leading his company in the charge. He is mentioned in the reports as a most intelligent and brave young officer.

The crushing defeat of Hood's army in front of Nashville caused the wreck of it to flee in greatest confusion southwardly through the state of Tennessee, and into Alabama. The next day at 1 o'clock the 21st was at Franklin with the 4th Corps, and in a few days had moved into Northern Alabama.

The regiment went into winter quarters at Huntsville, Ala. In March, 1865, the 4th Corps was ordered to East Tennessee; camped near Bull's Gap until early in May, when, with the 4th Corps, the regiment was sent to Nashville, Tenn. June 19th, took cars for Johnsonville, Tenn., then by boats to New Orleans, La. After a halt of a few weeks at New Orleans were shipped to Indianola, Tex., and marched to Victoria, Texas, where, on the 9th of December, the regiment was mustered out and ordered to Louisville, Ky., to be paid off and disbanded, which took place January 11, 1866.

The original term of service of Lieut. Col. J. C. Evans and Maj. J. E. Hoskins having expired, they were mustered out January 12, 1865, at Huntsville, Ala., and W. R. Milward and John D. Nash were commissioned lieutenant-colonel and major, to date January 31st. Since the war Col. Milward has resided in Lexington, Ky.

Gen. S. W. Price was born at Nicholasville, Ky., August 5, 1828. He early displayed a talent for painting, and studied the art under the best masters in New York. While engaged in artistic work, the war came on, and he took the honorable part shown in the sketch of his regiment. Having recovered from his wound at Kennesaw, sufficiently for duty other than field service, he was placed in command of the post at Lexington, Ky. Before retiring from the service, he was brevetted brigadier-general. After the war he continued to reside in Lexington. A number of his paintings have great merit; among them, his portrait of Gen. Thomas, and that of President Fillmore, are the most noted. Intense application, combined with injuries received from military service, caused him to lose his sight, and for a number of years he has been totally blind. He resides in Louisville, and is held in the highest esteem and honor by all who know him.

Twenty-second Kentucky Infantry.

(COPIED FROM THE ADJUTANT-GENERAL'S REPORT.)

The 22d Regiment of Kentucky Volunteer Infantry was organized at Camp Swigert, Greenup county, Ky., on the 12th day of December, 1861, under D. W. Lindsey, as colonel; Geo. W. Monroe, lieutenant-colonel, and Wesley Cook, major, by which officers the regiment was principally recruited. Company A was recruited from the city of Louisville and Franklin county; Companies B and C from Greenup county; Company D from Carter county; Company E from Lewis county; Company F from Franklin and Greenup counties; Company G from Carter and Boyd counties; Company H and I from Carter county, and Company K from the city of Louisville. Previous to the organization of the regiment, Companies A, K and the larger portion of Company F were stationed at Frankfort, Ky., and did efficient service under the direction of the state authority. The remaining companies of the regiment were in Eastern Kentucky, and operated effectively in that section of this state, and also in West Virginia.

Immediately after the organization of the regiment, it was ordered up the Sandy valley, and rendered most important service in the expedition against the rebel general, Humphrey Marshall. A detachment of the 22d, and of the 14th Ky. Infantry, under command of Lieut. Col. Monroe, during the battle of Middle Creek, charged and dislodged from a strong position the command of Gen. Williams, C. S. A., which movement, as the commanding officer, Gen. Garfield, reports, was "determinate of the day."

The mission up the Sandy having been accomplished, the 22d was ordered by way of Louisville to Cumberland Gap, and proved to be one of the regiments chiefly relied upon by Gen. G. W. Morgan for the capture of that point. During the stay of Gen. Morgan at the Gap, the discipline and efficiency of this regiment was frequently mentioned in general orders, and after the battle of Tazewell to the 22d was assigned the duty of covering the retreat of De Courcy's brigade from that field.

During the retreat of Gen. Morgan's division from Cumberland Gap, to the Ohio river, this regiment was assigned to responsible duty, and discharged the same in such manner as to receive the praise of the commanding general.

Immediately after reaching the Ohio river, Morgan's division, with the exception of Gen. Baird's brigade, was ordered up the Kanawha valley to the relief of Gen. Cox. After driving the enemy beyond Gauley Bridge the same command was ordered south, and reached Memphis, Tenn., about the 15th day of November, 1862. At this place the division received some additions by recruits, and the 22d was augmented by some thirty men from Capt. R. B. Taylor's company, who were assigned to Company I, and Capt. Estep, successor to Capt Taylor, was assigned to the command of that company.

The regiment, then composing a part of Morgan's division, of Sherman's command, proceeded down the Mississippi river, and on the 28th and 29th of December, 1862, attacked the works of the enemy, upon the Yazoo river, at Haynes' Bluff, or Chickasaw Bayou. In the charge on the 29th, the 22d lost a number of killed and wounded, among whom were those gallant officers Captains Garrard and Hegan, and Lieut. Truett, killed, and Lieut. Col. Monroe, Captains Bruce and Gathright, and Lieutenants Bacon and Gray, wounded.

Shortly after the battle of Chickasaw Bayou, the Army of the Mississippi, under Maj. Gen. McClernand, captured and destroyed Arkansas Post, a strong position upon the Arkansas river, in which affair the 22d bore an honorable part.

After remaining at Young's point and Milliken's Bend two or three months this regiment, with McClernand's corps, the 13th, of which it formed a part, took the lead in the movement, by way of Bruensburg, to invest Vicksburg from the rear; the 22d performing an important part in all the engagements incident thereto, as well as in the capture of Vicksburg. After the surrender of that important point the regiment marched with the brigade to which it was attached, and assisted in the capture of Jackson, Miss. The 22d, then following the fortune of the 13th Army Corps, was sent to the Gulf Department, where it rendered good service.

The regiment veteranized at Baton Rouge in March, 1864, and was consolidated with the 7th Ky. Veteran Infantry; the non-veterans being mustered out at Louisville, Ky., January 20, 1865.

The regiment was engaged in the following named general engagements, besides numerous skirmishes, viz: Middle Creek, Ky.; Cumberland Gap, Tazewell, Tenn.; Haynes' Bluff, or Chickasaw Bayou, Miss.; Arkansas Post, Port Gibson or Thompson's Hill, Champion Hill or Baker's Creek, Big Black Bridge, siege of Vicksburg, Jackson, Miss., and Red River; in almost all of which the regiment was commanded by Lieut. Col. Monroe; Col. Lindsey being in command of the brigade or division.

As an evidence of the appreciation in which this regiment was held by commanding officers, the following official correspondence and orders are published:

"Headquarters Ky. Volunteers, A. G. O.
"Frankfort, January 30, 1862.

"Col. D. W. Lindsey, 22d Ky. Volunteers, Paintsville:

"Colonel: . . . . All accounts concur in giving honor and praise to your men engaged in Middle Creek fight.

"The reported gallantry of your men has given infinite satisfaction to their friends here.

"Very truly yours,
"(Signed) Jno. W. Finnell,
"Adjutant-General Kentucky Volunteers."

"Headquarters 13th Army Corps,
"Near Vicksburg, June 5, 1863.

"Governor: I have the honor to inform you that there are two general officers and three regiments, the 7th, 19th and 22d Ky., in the 13th Army Corps, Department of the Tennessee, under my command, who crossed the Mississippi river with me, at Bruensburg, below Grand Gulf, on the 30th day of April, and who took part in the battles of Thompson's Hill, on the 1st of May; Champion Hills, on the 16th; Big Black Bridge, on the 17th of May, and at Vicksburg, beginning on the 19th of May and continuing up to the present time.

"I am most happy, sir, to congratulate you, and, through you, your noble state, for the victories won by the common effort of her brave sons with those of sister states, and to bear testimony to the gallantry, bravery and good conduct of her officers and men in all these bloody struggles. They bore themselves with the unflinching steadiness of veterans, both under galling fires of artillery and musketry, and in making charges upon fortified lines.

"They have shown themselves compeer and fit companions in arms with brave men of sister states in a series of battles, in which it has become impossible to make particular mention of those who distinguished themselves, without mentioning, individually, both officers and men.

"Your most obedient servant,
"(Signed) John A. McClernand,
"Major-General Commanding 13th Army Corps, Dept. of the Tenn.
"His Excellency James F. Robinson, Governor of Kentucky."

NOTE.—During the operations in the South, the 22d Ky. Infantry belonged to D. W. Lindsey's 2d Brigade of Osterhaus' division, 13th Army Corps.

The following are extracts from the official reports of Maj. Gen. John A. McClernand of date June 17, 1863, headquarters 13th Army Corps, Vicksburg, Miss.:

Battle of Champion Hill.

. . . . In front of my center, as well as by right, the enemy appeared in great numbers. Garrard's brigade was hard pressed, and Gen. Osterhaus requested that it should be supported. All of Lawler's brigade of Carr's division, except a reserve of one regiment, also advanced to support Lindsey's, who had pushed a charge near the mouth of the battery. Lawler's brigade here cast the trembling balance in our favor. Himself narrowly escaping the effect of a shell—his men joined Lindsey, and both dashed forward, shooting down the enemy's battery, horses, driving away his gunners and capturing two pieces of cannon.

. . . The enemy, thus beaten at all points, fled in confusion, the main body along the road leading to Vicksburg, a fragment to the left of that road. Gen. Carr's division taking the advance, hotly pressed the former, and Lindsey's and Burbridge's brigades the latter, until night closed in, each taking many prisoners.

Battle of Big Black River.

. . . Osterhaus' division was ordered to form to the right of the road, Lindsey's brigade in front and the remaining two regiments of Garrard's brigade obliquely on the left and rear of Lindsey's, to counteract any movement in that direction. My right center and left engaged the enemy with increasing effect; and, dashing forward under a heavy fire across a narrow field, and with fixed bayonets, carried the enemy's works, capturing many prisoners and routing him. This feat was eminently brilliant, and reflects the highest credit upon the gallant officers and men of Gen. Lawler's and Osterhaus' commands, who achieved it. It was determinate of the success of the day. Most of the enemy escaped to the commanding bluff, on the opposite side of the river, while others, hotly pressed by Benton's brigade and the right of Lindsey's, were cut off from that escape; and, driven to the left and down the river, upon the left of Lindsey's and the front of Burbridge's brigades, fell into their hands.

Siege of Vicksburg—Storming on 22d of May.

Five minutes before 10 o'clock the bugle sounded the charge, and at 10 o'clock my columns of attack moved forward, and within fifteen minutes Lawler's and Landram's brigades had carried the ditch, slope and bastion of a fort. Some of the men, emulous of each other, rushed into the fort, finding a piece of artillery, and in time to see the men who had been serving and supporting it escape behind another defense commanding the interior of the former. . . . Within fifteen minutes after Lawler's and Landram's success Benton's and Burbridge's brigades, fired by the example, rushed forward and carried the ditch and slope of a heavy earthwork, and planted their colors on the latter.

. . . Men never fought more gallantly, nay, more desperately. For more than eight long hours they maintained their ground with death-like tenacity; neither the blazing sun nor the deadly fire of the enemy shook them; their constancy and valor filled me with admiration. The spectacle was one never to be forgotten.

Meantime, Osterhaus' and Hovey's forces, forming the column of assault on the left, pushed forward, under a severe fire, upon a more extended line, until an enfilading fire from a strong redoubt on their left front, and physical exhaustion, compelled them to take shelter behind a ridge. Here they could distinctly hear the words of hostile command. Their skirmishers, however, kept up the conflict. . . .

While referring to the reports of division, brigade and regimental commanders, for particular notice of the officers of their commands most distinguishing themselves, it is proper, as commander of the corps, that I should recommend Brig. Gens. Hovey, Carr and Osterhaus for promotion; also Cols. Slack, Stone, Keigwin, Landram, Lindsey and Mudd. The skill, valor and signal services of those officers entitle them to it.

The history of the 7th Ky. Infantry is here referred to as illustrating the service in the same campaigns with the 22d. For faithful and gallant service Col. D. W. Lindsey was recommended for promotion to brigadier-general. He was ordered to Kentucky to be assigned to the position of adjutant-general of the state. Under his administration of this office the efficiency of the Kentucky regiments was greatly increased. After the war he published the invaluable collection of records, known as the Adjutant-General's Report. He is at this date one of the most eminent lawyers in Kentucky and resides at Frankfort.

Orlando Brown, Jr., adjutant of the 22d, subsequently became lieutenant-colonel of the 14th Ky. Infantry.

Twenty-third Kentucky Infantry.

October 6, 1861, Jere T. Boyle, then a practicing lawyer at Danville, Ky., who had taken a determined stand for the Union, announced his intention to raise a brigade to consist of four regiments. They were promptly raised. One of them became the 23d Ky. Infantry; the others were the 9th and 18th and 19th. The 23d was recruited and organized by Col. Marc Mundy.

The camp of organization was Camp King, near Covington. The companies came from that part of the state, one being from Mason county, one from Pendleton and one from Boone; the others from Campbell and Kenton. The regiment was in camp until February, 1862, when it went to Lexington; thence beyond Lebanon to the Rolling Fork; from thence it marched to Bardstown, and to Louisville, where it went on board the steamer "Diana" and was transported to Nashville, where it remained during the spring. From Nashville, in June, it went to Murfreesboro and Tullahoma, and then to Pulaski. In this and the following month it moved from place to place, being at Columbia and Lebanon and Nashville, and against Murfreesboro. In August it was at Liberty and Altamont. August 30th it was in a severe fight at Round mountain. Col. Grose, the brigade commander, in mentioning this fight, in a report says, that Forrest attacked what he supposed was a wagon train, but came in contact with Col. Mundy's 23d Ky., and was handsomely repulsed. The 23d lost four men. The 23d then marched with Buell's army to Kentucky, being in Crittenden's corps, W. S. Smith's division, Grose's brigade.

After the battle of Perryville, in which the 23d did not become engaged, though it was with the army at that place, and after Bragg's retirement from Kentucky, the 23d marched to Nashville, where it remained until a little while before the battle of Murfreesboro. Col. Grose, in his report, says, we left camp near Nashville December 26th and bivouacked that night in front of La Vergne; 27th moved to Stewart's creek, on the other side of which were the enemy's pickets; skirmished then till the 29th, where the creek was crossed in line by wading, and the command moved to within two and one-half miles of Murfreesboro, skirmishing all the way. The 30th then was skirmishing all day. Col. Grose describes the fighting as more terrible and bloody than that he had witnessed at Shiloh. January 1st it was renewed. Col. Grose commended all the regiments in his command. Lieut. J. P. Duke, of the 23d, was on his staff, and is specially mentioned for gallantry. In the regimental report, which was made by Maj. Thos. H. Hamrick, the fighting of December 31st and January 1st is described as terrific. In the two days the regiment lost eight killed and fifty-one wounded.

After the battle the regiment remained at Murfreesboro some days. January 24th it went with other troops on an expedition to Woodbury, Tenn., where it was engaged with loss. In the organization of Rosecrans' army at that time the 23d was in Crittenden's corps, Palmer's division, Grose's brigade, and was led by Lieut. Col. Jas. C. Foy. June, 1863, the regiment marched to Manchester, and from thence to Sequatchie valley. It was on duty in that section until the movement upon Chattanooga. Descending Walden's ridge it crossed the Tennessee river at Battle creek September 4th, and went into camp at Shell Mound. September 5th moved to Whiteside; September 6th within four miles of Trenton; September 8th moved on a reconnoissance up Lookout mountain, arriving at Point Lookout 11:30 a. m. The enemy could be seen, and there was skirmishing. That evening bivouacked near Rossville, four miles from Chattanooga.

September 10th moved on the Ringgold road, bivouacked near Graysville; September 11th at Ringgold; September 12th on Chickamauga creek, opposite Lee and Gordon's mill; September 13th skirmished; 14th, crossed the creek and bivouacked in Chattanooga valley; 15th, back to Lee and Gordon's mills, where it was the 19th. The present limits do not admit of a detail of the battle on that day and the next. Col. Foy says the fire on the 19th was very hot; it appeared that every third man was struck; a bullet went through his coat. The regiment was under a cross fire. On the 20th the regiment had a slight breast works. The brigade held a position until 4 p. m. In the changes of troops the 23d was left to hold a position that five regiments had held. The artillery was being retired and the 23d received orders to retire. It did so in perfect formation and marched near to Rossville, where it bivouacked. The losses were one officer killed—Lieut. J. C. Hoffman—nine men killed, three officers wounded, forty-five men wounded. Col. Foy specially mentions Maj. G. W. Northup, Adjt. W. H. Mundy, Captains Tiffet and Williams, Lieutenants J. P. Duke and Henry G. Skiner. He also commends the conduct of Chaplain Wm. H. Black, and Surgeons Morrison and Hosbrook. The splendid fighting of the 23d is mentioned in numerous other reports.

The battle being over, the 23d took position on Mission Ridge, immediately north of Rossville Gap. From thence it moved to Chattanooga, where it remained in camp until operations began under Gen. Grant. In Gen. Grant's memoirs is found a clear statement of the opening of the river from Chattanooga to Bridgeport, so that the army might receive supplies. The soldiers called this "opening the cracker line." It was accomplished by taking possession of the opposite side of the river at Brown's Ferry. Gen. Grant describes the taking of Brown's Ferry by Gen. Hazen with 1,800 picked men, they being supported by larger bodies of troops under Generals Hooker, Palmer and Smith. Hazen's picked men floated down the river in pontoon boats at 3 o'clock a. m., October 27th. "At 5 o'clock," said Gen. Grant, "Hazen landed at Brown's Ferry, surprised the picket guard and captured it." By 7 o'clock the pontoon boats had ferried over Smith's whole command, which occupied a hill commanding the ferry. By 10 o'clock the bridge was laid, and the connection was made, which opened the "cracker line." This movement is thus mentioned because a portion of the 23d, under Capt. Tiffet, constituted part of Hazen's picked force.

In the list of sixteen battles, the names of which Gen. Grant authorized to be inscribed on the colors of the 23d, is "Brown's Ferry."

From this date until November 23d, the 23d was in camp at Chattanooga. On that day it moved out and took part in the fighting which preceded the great charge at Mission Ridge. It was also engaged November 24th, and, on the 25th, participated in the charge. Col. Foy says, in his report: "There never was such a bold and daring charge made or witnessed by the army of the Cumberland." On reaching the crest, the 23d advanced to the right, along the ridge. The color-bearer fell, and Lieut. Duke "grasped and carried them the remainder of the evening." The 23d captured four pieces of cannon. Its loss on the 25th was eight killed and twenty-nine wounded. Among the officers who led this charge Adjt. W. H. Mundy was conspicuous. November 26th marched back to camp at Chattanooga.

November 27th prepared for the march to Knoxville, for the relief of Gen. Burnside, who was besieged by Longstreet. On this march the 23d was consolidated with the 5th Ky., Col. Berry. November 29th at Harrison; 30th, near the Hiawassee; December 2d passed Decatur; 3d, camped at Sweetwater; 5th, crossed the river at Morgantown on a bridge Gen. Sherman built the day before. December 6th passed through Maryville; 7th, camped two miles from Knoxville, Longstreet having raised the siege and gone. The remainder of the month of December was spent in the East Tennessee valley above Knoxville, being Morrristown, Powder Springs, Strawberry Plains, New Market and Blain's crossroads, where, January 5, 1864, the 23d re-enlisted in the veteran organization.

The re-enlistment at this particular time is in every way remarkable. The service had been as severe as soldiers are ever called to perform. There had been marching and fighting and starving. The first day of January, 1864, was the coldest weather known. Under these circumstances these heroic men re-enlisted for three years' further service.

After the veteran furlough the regiment returned to the front at Chattanooga. Joining the army under Gen. Sherman, organizing for the Atlanta campaign, the 23d was assigned to the 2d Brigade (Hazen) of Wood's division, 4th Army Corps.

The regiment was then commanded by Lieut. Col. Geo. W. Northup. Limit forbids a detail of all the events of the Atlanta campaign. The soldiers called it the battle of May, June, July and August.

On the 19th of August the 23d was transferred to the 3d Brigade of Stanley's division, 4th Corps. In the list of sixteen battles named on the colors of the regiment, by order of Gen. Grant, appear Rocky Face, Resaca, New Hope Church, Pine Top, Kennesaw, Smyrna, Atlanta, Lovejoy, all being in this campaign.

After the fall of Atlanta the 23d rested in camp with the army until October 1st, when it moved with Sherman's army in pursuit of Hood through Northern Georgia. The whole of the month of October was spent in daily marches. The pursuit of Hood proving fruitless, Sherman determined to go through to the sea, dividing his army and sending the 4th and 23d Corps to Tennessee, to serve under Gen. Thomas. From Northern Georgia the 23d went to Nashville, and from thence marched with the 4th and 23d Corps (they being under the immediate command of Gen. Schofield) to Pulaski, Tenn. In November Gen. Hood endeavored to take Columbia, Tenn., but Schofield's troops reached that place first. Then Hood attempted to take Spring Hill by a flank movement, but Gen. Schofield dispatched Stanley's division to that place. The 23d being in Whitaker's brigade of that division, assisted in preventing Hood's occupation of Spring Hill. Much has been said about why Hood's troops did not move on to the Pike near Spring Hill, and thus cut off Schofield, who was at Columbia. Gen. Walter Whitaker gave the best answer to the question. He said: "The reason Hood didn't get there was because he couldn't. I was there myself. I was there with seven regiments in my brigade."

The next day after that movement the battle of Franklin occurred, in which the 23d bore its part, being with Kimball's division. The attack on that part of the line was repulsed at every point. After the battle of Franklin the 23d moved with Schofield's troops to Nashville, and two weeks later—December 15th and 16th—participated in the battle of Nashville. The complete destruction of Hood's army at that time practically ended the war in the West. The 23d followed in the pursuit into Alabama. In January and February, 1865, it was at Huntsville. From thence it marched to Lick creek, East Tennessee, and from thence to Nashville, where it was in April and May. It was then transported to New Orleans. It was then sent to Green Lake, Texas, where it remained until September. In October it was at LaMar, Texas. In November at Victoria, Texas, where it was mustered out December, 1865. In its term of service four officers and eighty-one men killed, and one hundred and seven died of sickness. No regiment had a more honorable or praiseworthy record, or experienced harder service.

In November, 1862, Col. Marc Mundy was made commandant of the post at Louisville, in which position he continued about one year. He displayed great ability as an organizer, and materially improved the condition of affairs in the city. At that time Louisville was crowded with passing soldiers, and the activity in every branch of the military was constantly on the increase, which made the duties of the post commandant unusually arduous.

Since the war Col. Mundy has practiced law in Louisville.

The adjutant of the regiment, Wm. H. Mundy, brother of Col. Mundy, has resided in Louisville since the war, a member of the firm of J. B. Speed & Co. He has assisted in the preparation of the foregoing account of his regiment, and has materially aided in the publication of this work.

Twenty-fourth Kentucky Infantry.

(CONDENSED FROM A LONGER ACCOUNT PREPARED BY COL. JOHN S. HURT.)

At the beginning of the war Kentucky had a considerable military organization known as the "State Guards." The legislature passed an act providing for the "Reserves," and under this a company, afterward known as Company I, of the 24th Ky., was organized in Bath county, in July, 1861. John S. Hurt became its commanding officer, and he procured arms for his company from the military board of Kentucky. At this time it being apparent that the "State Guards" could not be relied on to execute the real will of the state, which was opposed to secession, but that it was influenced by its leaders the other way, the United States government determined to furnish arms to the Unionists who would organize into "Home Guards." Through the influence of Senator Davis, Judge Robertson, Generals Nelson and Speed and others, many companies were thus furnished with arms. Among them were Companies K, of Montgomery county; C, of Powell; E, of Bath, and D, of Fleming, so designated in the 24th regiment.

Camp Dick Robinson was established where the Unionists organized into several regiments. In September the Confederate forces entered Kentucky, at Columbus and Bowling Green, and Confederate Gen. John S. Williams established a camp at Prestonsburg. In September Senator Andrew Johnson, of Tennessee, came into Kentucky making Union speeches, among other places at Mt. Sterling; from thence he went to Owingsville, and it being feared he would be captured by a Confederate force known to be between the two places, he was attended on the way by Capt. Halley Smith's Home Guard company, of Montgomery county (Company K in the 24th), the Owingsville company (Company I, of the 24th), also met him on the way. Johnson made a great speech in Owingsville, and was guarded back to Mt. Sterling. There being threats that the arms of the Home Guard companies would be taken, they were guarded for a time, then a meeting of several companies was provided for, to be held at Isles Mill. The meeting was addressed by Hons. A. Trumbo, and James Sudduth, the latter of whom was killed a year later by a squad of rebels near Owingsville. At Isles Mill it was agreed that camp should be established at Olympian Springs, and there, September 29th, Capt. Hurt took charge with a rank of major; associated with him was Capt. North; both of these officers having served in the Mexican war. Camping ground was furnished by H. Gill, proprietor of Olympian Springs, and the neighbors supplied the camp with provisions. Other volunteers came in rapidly from Rowan, Lewis, Carter and Morgan counties, until there were about five hundred in camp. To this place came L. B. Grigsby, of Clark county, with authority to organize a regiment and furnish supplies. It was agreed that he should be made colonel, and the force then was mustered into service for one year. Late in October Gen. Nelson came to the camp with a force of about half a dozen regiments on an expedition to disperse the enemy's camp at Prestonsburg; the 24th went on this expedition, the result of which the enemy was driven from Prestonsburg to Piketon, and then across the Big Sandy. "This campaign of Gen. Nelson, though comparatively bloodless, had the effect of freeing Eastern Kentucky from incursions of rebel forces until the invasion of the state by Gen. Bragg, in the fall of 1862."

Col. Hurt also mentions the fact that a number of prominent Unionists accompanied this expedition as aids to Gen. Nelson. Messrs. Fireman, Owings, Dr. Fleming, and W. H. Wadsworth, of Maysville; Judge Richard Apperson, and Thos. Turner, of Mt. Sterling.

In December, 1861, the men under Col. Grigsby were ordered to Lexington, where they were joined by Capt. Smith's company, of Montgomery; Capt. Hall's, of Bath; Capt. Schoville's, of Laurel; Capt, Jones', of Rockcastle, and there being ten full companies, the 24th was organized and mustered into the United States service. It was at once ordered by Gen. Buell to Louisville and from thence to Bardstown, where it reported to Gen. Lytle, being then commanded by Col. Hurt, and went into a camp of instruction. From this camp it went to Spring Garden, on Salt river, when it was brigaded with the 15th, 40th and 57th Ind. Col. Wagner of the 15th commanding the brigade, in Gen. Thos. Wood's division. From Spring Garden, marched to Lebanon; thence to Munfordville; about the last of February, 1862, marched with Buell's army to Nashville, passing through the city the 24th camped with Wood's division about two miles out. About the last of March the army was ordered to Pittsburg Landing. Gen. Wood says in his report, he debarked his division at 12 o'clock, April 7th (second day of the battle of Shiloh), he speaks of Wagner's brigade doing good service in driving the enemy that afternoon from his last stronghold. It captured forty prisoners and re-took a number of our own prisoners. From Shiloh the 24th moved to Corinth with the army participating in the skirmishing and other duties of that campaign. From Corinth the march was through Iuka, Tuscumbia, Decatur, Huntsville and to the railroad leading to Chattanooga. Also passing through Fayetteville and Shelbyville to Wartrace, and from thence to Tullahoma, when it became manifest that Bragg's army was moving to Kentucky. Buell concentrated a strong force at Nashville, and began his march to Louisville. The 24th was on this march, reaching Louisville in September. From Louisville to Perryville October 8th. The 24th was on the field at Perryville and slightly engaged. After the battle Bragg retreated from the state, and Buell pursued. One of Buell's columns passed through Lancaster, another through Stanford, the 24th being with Wood's division of the latter and engaged in a severe skirmish at Stanford. The pursuit ending, Buell's army marched through Glasgow to Nashville and vicinity, Wood's division going into camp at Silver Springs.

From Silver Springs the 24th was ordered back to Kentucky at the special request of the governor, and in November it marched to Nashville, and from thence it moved by rail to Frankfort, Ky., where the regiment was presented with a flag by the ladies of that place; it carried the flag to the end of its service; for some weeks it was kept on duty in Kentucky.

In January, 1863, the 24th was ordered to report to Gen. Baird at Louisville. From thence it was ordered to Nashville by steamboat with Baird's division. While on the boat small-pox broke out, and instead of landing at Nashville the boat went some distance up stream, and the men were kept isolated until the trouble disappeared. The latter part of February, 1863, the regiment was ordered to return to Nashville, and from thence moved by rail to Winchester, Ky. Near that place was Col. Cluke with a portion of Morgan's command and the 24th with other troops made a night march for the purpose of capturing him; the movement only succeeding in causing Cluke to retire beyond successful pursuit.

Up to this time Col. Grigsby had personally commanded the regiment, but going on other service Col. Hurt took charge, and so continued during the remainder of its career. In March Col. Hurt was ordered to report the regiment to Col. Gilbert at Mt. Vernon. From thence to Wildcat, fourteen miles out from Mt. Vernon; from this point the regiment was engaged in out post duty until June 1, 1863; it was then ordered to march hastily to Lancaster and report to Gen. Carter. The cause was Morgan's coming into Kentucky on his celebrated raid which ended in his capture in Ohio. From Lancaster the regiment marched to Camp Nelson and while there, the resignation of Col. Grigsby occurred and Col. Hurt was commissioned colonel. About three months after Capt. Lafayette North was commissioned lieutenant-colonel.

August, 1863, the 24th was brigaded with the 65th Ill., Col. Cannon, 63d Ind., and 103d Ohio, Col. Cameron commanding the brigade, being in Hascall's division of Burnside's army, then about to move on its expedition to East Tennessee. Passing through Somerset, Ky., and Jacksboro, Tenn., the command reached Lenoir's Station on the railroad. September 1st the 24th was at Concord, twenty miles from Knoxville; from thence Gen. Burnside advanced a portion of his troops as far up as the border of Virginia, leaving others at Knoxville. In the country about Watauga there was skirmishing, but soon the infantry all returned to Knoxville, and on to Concord. November 1st the brigade was ordered to Knoxville.

The following is an extract from the report of Col. Cameron, the brigade commander:

November 1st, the 2d Brigade, 3d Division, 23d Army Corps, occupied heights on the south side of Holston river, opposite Knoxville.

November 15th and 16th, engaged in skirmish with, and assisted in, repulsing enemy's cavalry under Wheeler. From that time to November 24th, employed in fortifying the heights.

November 24th, engaged in skirmish with enemy's infantry one and one-half miles southwest of Knoxville.

November 25th, repulsed an assault made by Hood's division, Longstreet's corps, after a severe engagement lasting two hours and a quarter. From that time to the 29th, daily skirmishing continued with the enemy.

November 29th, the enemy again advanced, but, after four hours heavy skirmishing, was driven back by the 24th Ky. and six companies of the 65th Ill.

Col. Hurt in the extended account of the 24th from which this is condensed gives a graphic narrative of the siege of Knoxville, in which his regiment bore a most honorable part, being in position on the south side of the river, where there was daily skirmishing and several heavy charges. In one of the battles the loss of the 24th was sixty-five killed and wounded, among them Lieut. Lee killed and Adjt. Joyce and Lieut. Davis wounded.

After the siege of Knoxville the 24th moved up the valley to Strawberry Plains; it remained in East Tennessee during the winter, being stationed at different points.

In April, 1864, the various forces were concentrated for the Atlanta campaign. Gen. Schofield's corps, the 23d, moved out of East Tennessee, crossing the river at Loudon, and passing through Cleveland to Red Clay, a point near Chattanooga. The 24th at that time was in the 23d Army Corps, Gen. Cox's division, Cannon's brigade. Col. Hurt commanding the regiment. While in East Tennessee three officers of the 24th were detailed to serve on the staff of Gen. Cox; Lieutenants D. G. Howell, D. S. Trumbo, and Coughlin. The latter was afterward killed in the battle of Franklin, November 30th.

It would require more space than can be given here to narrate the experiences of the 24th in the Atlanta campaign.

It was engaged at Rocky Face and Resaca, May 14th, and in the daily skirmishing and fighting thereafter through the months of May, June, July and August. Among the wounded at Resaca were Captains James Carey and Peter Hedges, and Lieut. Jesse Nelson. Near Cartersville Col. Hurt was ordered to take the brigade and march up the river four miles to destroy a foundry. He asked to be allowed to take only his regiment, thinking that enough to accomplish the work. This was agreed to. He then supplied fifteen men with pine for torches, and marching to the place fired the building, though the enemy was in close proximity. In the long continued struggle, Col. Hurt says: "The picket lines were very near each other, and kept up an almost constant fire during the day and sometimes during the night. . . . The artillery firing, which was sometimes along the whole line, was at night tremendous, and seemed to make the ground tremble." Col. Hurt mentions the fact in connection with the constant necessity for forcing the enemy from fortified lines, that "the enemy had in their employ about seven thousand negro slaves, who under the supervision of army engineers were constantly building intrenchments in the rear of their army at points selected by the engineers, so that when they were driven from a position they could retreat to another already prepared."

Near Kennesaw mountain several of the 24th were wounded, among them Capt. Goodpaster and Adjt. Joyce.

The crossing of the Chattahoochee, July 9th, at the mouth of Soap creek, several miles above the railroad, has been characterized by Gen. Sherman as "one of the brilliant feats in the annals of war." It was effected by Gen. Schofield with the 23d Army Corps. Troops were rushed across the swollen stream in canvas pontoon boats, in the face of the enemy, and then the bridge was laid, and the whole corps hurried across. In this memorable movement the 24th took an active part. It was then continuously engaged in the operations against Atlanta, and the numerous battles ensuing. From the country east of the city, it passed around to the west and south, fighting in many places, among others, Jonesboro and Lovejoy.

The casualties of the 24th in the Atlanta campaign. were twelve men killed, and seventy-seven wounded, and six officers wounded.

After the capture of Atlanta the 24th went into camp near Decatur; in the month of October it was ordered to Kentucky. It marched into Atlanta, and from thence proceeded by rail to Lexington, Ky. Although the term of service had expired the regiment was held during the suspense attending Hood's movement in the vicinity of Nashville. Hood's army being completely defeated, December 16, 1864, and the war virtually over in the west, the 24th was mustered out of service on the 31st day of January, 1865.

Col. Hurt concludes his account of his regiment by saying he can never forget the heroism displayed by its officers and soldiers, and that its deeds will always be remembered with pride by a grateful country. Since the war Col. Hurt has resided at Mt. Sterling, Ky., where he is a prominent lawyer, and most highly esteemed as a useful and honorable citizen.

Twenty-fifth Kentucky Infantry.

A number of the men in the camp at Calhoun, Ky., came from the southern part of the state. In the account of the 17th Ky. Infantry it may be seen that Col. McHenry says many came across Green river. Not only did they cross that stream, they came from the counties on the extreme southern border of the state. Many of them were from Christian county. The account of Col. Buckner's regiment * shows that in the summer of 1861 he attempted to organize a regiment at Hopkinsville, in Christian county. Although that was one of the largest slave-holding counties in Kentucky, a remarkable Union sentiment prevailed there. Hopkinsville was the home not only of Col. Jas. F. Buckner, who was engaged in organizing a Union regiment there, as stated, but also of Gen. Jas. S. Jackson, Col. Benj. H. Bristow, Maj. Breathitt, of Jackson's regiment; Maj. Claggett, of the 25th and 17th; Col. S. M. Starling, Col. Edmund Starling, Wm. Starling, B. C. Ritter, Ben S. Campbell, Ned Campbell, Judge R. T. Petrie, Geo. Poindexter, Dr. A. Webber, Wm. T. Buckner, Lewis Buckner, A. V. Long, Gabriel Long, Newton Payne, B. T. Underwood, Joab Clark, Judge H. R. Littell, Col. C. M. Callis, Elder Enos Campbell, Dr. D. J. Gish, Mr. Davenport, Gen. D. S. Hays, Col. E. S. Edmunds, Capt. Wm. A. Sasseen, Col. Richard Durrett, Walter Evans, John Feland, and many others. Such men exerted a powerful influence and that section of the state was strongly Union in sentiment. Col. Buckner's regiment was broken up, and he himself was taken prisoner and carried South, but his men escaped and made their way to the Union camps at Owensboro, Calhoun and Henderson. In the early fall of 1861 Col. Jas. M. Shackelford recruited the 25th Ky. Infantry. Associated with him was Benj. H. Bristow, who became the lieutenant-colonel. A number of those who had been with Col. Buckner at Hopkinsville became identified with this organization. As the 25th became consolidated with the 17th Ky. after the battle of Shiloh, and its roster combined with it, the names of some of the officers will be here given: Col. Jas. M. Shackelford, Lieut. Col. Benj. H. Bristow, Captains D. M. Claggett, of Hopkinsville; Ben T. Perkins, of Elkton; T. W. Campbell, of Madisonville; Ben T. Underwood, of Hopkinsville; James H. Holoway, of Henderson; E. B. Edwards, Lieutenants Walter Evans, Ned Campbell, Frank H. Bristow (brother of B. H. Bristow), S. H. Perkins, J. W. Anthony, Campbell H. Johnson,

From the camp at Calhoun the 25th was ordered to join Gen. Grant, who was directing his movements against Forts Henry and Donelson. Proceeding by river transports it went with a brigade from Calhoun to Fort Donelson, and upon landing there, was welcomed by Gen. Grant, who said he had work to be done, and he expected a good account from the Kentuckians. The 25th at once engaged in the fighting at Donelson The report of Col. Jas. M. Shackelford describes how he had to form his men under fire, and that they behaved with great coolness; that at one time, while firing directly upon the enemy, they were ordered to cease firing while other troops moved through them, and then the formation was resumed and the fighting again went on, thus showing a coolness and steadiness remarkable in the first battle in which they were engaged.

Gen. Lew Wallace says, in his report: "Col. J. M. Shackelford, 25th Ky.; Col. H. B. Reed, 44th Ind., and Col. John H. McHenry, 17th Ky., and their field and company officers, all won honor and lasting praise; nor can less be given to the valor and endurance of the men who composed their regiments." Col. Cruft says: "The 25th formed line of battle under continued volleys of the enemy's musketry." The losses show the desperate fighting of the regiment, being seventy-two killed and wounded.

After the battle of Shiloh the 25th and 17th were in Gen. Hurlbut's division, Gen. Lauman's brigade of Grant's army, and being so assigned proceeded with that army to Pittsburg Landing. The 25th bore its part in the battle of Shiloh; it fought during the entire day, April 6th, and also fought in the advance of the next day. It was led in this action by Lieut. Col. Bristow and Maj. Wall, on account of the fact that Col. Shackelford had returned to Kentucky from Fort Donelson to recruit another regiment, in which work he was afterward assisted by Col. B. H. Bristow, forming the 8th Ky. Cavalry.

Col. Bristow, in his report of the battle of Shiloh, says that about 7 o'clock a. m., April 6th, the engagement was known to be general on account of the heavy fire of musketry and artillery; that his men formed with coolness and promptitude and moved forward in the direction of the firing. They soon became actively engaged. During the fighting Col. Bristow was prostrated and made insensible by the explosion of a shell immediately over his head; and Maj. Wall says, in his report, he had him carried from the field. From that time Maj. Wall took command and fought with the regiment until 4:30 p. m., when he received three wounds—one in the thigh, one in the foot and one in the breast. The regiment then was led by Capt. B. T. Underwood; and it also reported to Col. McHenry, of the 17th, who took charge. Col. McHenry says, in his report: "About 4 p. m., Sunday, owing to the withdrawal of Lieut. Col. Bristow and wounding of Maj. Wall, of the 25th, that command was turned over to me, and the gallant officers and men of that regiment acted with the same unabated courage and bravery that had characterized them during the whole day." Col. Hugh B. Reed, of the 44th Ind., which was brigaded with the 17th and 25th Ky., makes an interesting mention of these two regiments in his report. He says: "The enemy formed in column and charged over an open field on our left and in front of the 17th and 25th Ky., the gallant Col. McHenry commanding, who poured into their ranks a most terrific fire. I immediately wheeled two companies of my left wing to the left and opened on the flank. His ranks were mown down at each fire, but still he pressed forward and as bravely was he received. His front rank went down, leaving a line of the dead across his front, when he retreated in good order."

He again mentions Col. McHenry's men "charging in the thickest of the fight" on the second day.

In the month of April, after the battle of Shiloh, the 25th was consolidated with the 17th, and from that time the history of the two regiments is identical under the head of the 17th Ky. Infantry. The reader is referred to that account.

It is noticeable that many of the officers of the 25th were of more than ordinary prominence. Col. Shackelford became colonel of the 8th Ky. Cavalry and a brigadier-general; Lieut. Col. Bristow became colonel of the 8th Ky. Cavalry, and, after the war, was one of the most conspicuous men in the country. Capt. J. H. Holloway became major in the 8th Cavalry; Lieut. Walter Evans, who was very young, has achieved a wide reputation as a lawyer and in public life.

The consolidation of the 17th and 25th made one of the most valuable regiments in the service, and it made an heroic record. The account of the services of the officers and men of the 25th will be found in the history of the 17th Ky. Infantry.

The roster of the 25th is also to be found in the consolidation with that of the 17th.

Twenty-sixth Kentucky Infantry.

Some interesting facts connected with the organization of regiments in the western part of the state are found in the account of the 17th Infantry, Col. John. H. McHenry. In the preparation of the account here given the writer is indebted to Capt. S. D. Brown for valuable assistance, he having furnished a written statement, which, in itself, is a good history of the 26th, but in order to introduce certain record facts the whole is rewritten.

The 26th was recruited and organized by Col. S. G. Burbridge, but as he was made brigadier-general June 12, 1862, he was not long with the regiment. Recruiting commenced in the summer of 1861, and in September camp was established at the fair grounds at Owensboro. The companies came from the Green river counties, and there was no place or road in all the section of the state from Bowling Green to Henderson that was not known to some of the men. It was on this account that it was for a long time kept on duty at Bowling Green, as will appear in this narrative.

In November, 1861, the 26th moved from Owensboro to Calhoun, where it was camped in association with the 17th and 25th and 11th Ky. Infantry, and 3d Cavalry. The collection of officers there was notable. Gen. Thos. L. Crittenden, Colonels James S. Jackson, James M. Shackelford, P. B. Hawkins, John H. McHenry and others. From Calhoun the 17th and 25th were sent to join Grant's army in time to participate in the battle of Fort Donelson. The others were held a little longer. While in camp at Calhoun, from November, 1861, to February, 1862, the Confederates were in Kentucky, at Bowling Green, Russellville and Hopkinsville. The presence of these regiments at Calhoun deterred the Confederates from advancing north of Green river. The Confederate cavalry, however, under Forrest, did pass through the country, engaging in a severe fight with a battalion of the 3d Cavalry under Maj. E. H. Murray. When this occurred the 26th was marched rapidly to the scene of action, arriving about midnight and gathering up the bodies of five men killed, which were buried. A few days after the 26th marched to South Carrollton, to watch the movements of the Confederates, who were at Russellville. After remaining there some time it returned to Calhoun, and thence to Owensboro, where it embarked on a steamer to join Grant's army at Donelson.

Arriving at the mouth of Green river the steamers were met bearing the captured army from Donelson. The 26th was carrried on, however, and passed up the Cumberland by Fort Donelson, and landed at Nashville just as Buell's army was crossing the river into the city. The 26th marched through the deserted streets with Buell's army and went into camp about two miles beyond.

Up to this time the 26th had not been mustered into the service, the constant activity in Kentucky not having afforded opportunity. At Nashville, on the 5th day of March, 1862, it was regularly mustered by Maj. Bankhead.

The 26th remained at Nashville until about the 28th of March, when it started with other troops of Buell's army for Pittsburg Landing. It was brigaded with the 11th Ky. and 13th Ohio, Col. W. S. Smith commanding the brigade, in Crittenden's division. Pittsburg Landing was reached the night of the first day's battle of Shiloh. The next day it was engaged in heavy fighting, as the casualties show, there being seven killed, including Maj. John L. Davidson, and sixty wounded. Col. W. S. Smith, in his report of his brigade, says it bivouacked on a hill the night of the 6th. The next morning at 6 o'clock a. m. it moved on a prolongation of Nelson's line, and was promptly and most hotly engaged. During the day it resisted attacks and made charges, fighting steadily for hours, and, on the whole, pushing the enemy. He compliments the conduct of the 26th. All "bore themselves as true soldiers and officers through the dangers of the day."

In this battle the regiment was commanded by Lieut. Col. Cicero Maxwell, who, as will be seen, continued with it long afterward. Col. Maxwell, in his report, mentions Maj. John L. Davidson, "who behaved with the most undaunted bravery, and was killed instantly on the field while cheering the men in the charge." He also says the same of Lieut. Higdon, "who fell early in the charge." He also mentions the gallant conduct of Captains Thos. B. Fairleigh, Belt, Netter and Mattingly, and Lieutenants Ramsey, Taylor, Stanley, Smallhouse, Wells, Redfearne, Earnest, Ashcraft, Brown. The last-mentioned is Capt. S. D. Brown, who furnished the account here used. He says, it was about midnight that the river was crossed. The gunboats were throwing bombs. The 26th marched up to the line and rested in mud and rain, and at daylight they made coffee and soon went into the battle. After the battle of Shiloh the 26th moved with the army to Corinth, taking part in the siege and skirmishing there. Then moved to Tuscumbia, Florence and Athens, Ala., and camped at Battle Creek, Tenn. In the organization of Buell's army, June 10, 1862, the 26th and 11th Ky. were in VanCleve's brigade, Crittenden's division. In August the movements began which culminated in Buell's memorable march to Kentucky. Louisville was reached late in September; from thence the march was to the field at Perryville. At that time, October 8th, Capt. P. B. Hawkins, of the 11th Ky., commanded the brigade. Capt. Brown says, "the 26th was but slightly engaged" at Perryville. It continued in pursuit of Bragg until he was out of the state and then marched across the country to Nashville, where the army, then under Gen. Rosecrans, was concentrated, Buell having been relieved.

While the army was encamped near Nashville, there was the utmost need for troops in Kentucky, not only to protect the country generally, but especially to guard every mile of the railroad from Louisville to Nashville, over which all supplies had to be transported. On this account the 26th was sent to Bowling Green. At the time this was done, November 22d, Gen. Rosecrans wrote to Gen. H. G. Wright, who commanded the District of Kentucky, saying: "I have some splendid fighting regiments, which would be benefited by being stationed in Kentucky to recruit. I have sent the 15th and 26th to Bowling Green."

The urgent need of troops at that place, not only for its protection as a military point, but also for the general protection of Southern Kentucky, caused the 26th to be held at Bowling Green, under Col. Maxwell, for about a year. The acquaintance of its men and officers with the country made it peculiarly useful for that duty.

April 1, 1863, the 33d Ky. Infantry was consolidated with the 26th at Bowling Green, as may be seen by reference to the account of that regiment, forming companies F, H, I and K. Lieut. Col. Maxwell had been commissioned colonel June 12, 1862, and Capt. Thos. B. Fairleigh, major, May 5, 1862; also lieutenant-colonel June 12, 1862, and January 3, 1865, he was commissioned colonel. Ignatius Mattingly was made major June 12, 1862.

The regiment having become strong by the addition made by recruiting and by the addition of the 33d, it was in condition to be used in hard service.

January 31, 1864, it was at Camp Nelson under Col. Fairleigh. It then re-enlisted in the veteran organization and rendezvoused at Bowling Green in the spring, where it was mounted and used through the entire spring and summer for the protection of Kentucky. The brigade to which it was attached was commanded by Col. Maxwell. Col. Fairleigh was on detached service as post commandant at Louisville, and the regiment was led by the other officers in detachments. It served from Bowling Green to the Ohio river, and from the western part of the state to Lexington. In August, 1864, the original colonel of the 26th, Burbridge, was in command in Kentucky. Col. Maxwell commanded a brigade at Camp Nelson, and Lieut. Col. Fairleigh also had a brigade in his command. In September the 26th was at Frankfort. It then joined the command of Gen. Burbridge for the raid to the Salt Works, in Virginia. Capt. Brown says: "From the day we left Pikeville until our return to that point it was a continual fight. On Sunday, October 3d, a beautiful day, Gen. Burbridge attacked the works, and all that day was the battle. At night the 26th was left to build fires along the line of battle to hold the enemy in check while the division moved off the field and took up the retreat to Kentucky. The movement had been so loudly talked about that the enemy was aware of our coming, and were intrenched and outnumbered us."

October 29th it was ordered to Paducah. October 31st it arrived at Paducah. From thence it proceeded to Bowling Green, being in command of Capt. Francis M. Page.

Upon arriving at Bowling Green, Capt. Brown says: "We being yet mounted, made a hard ride after Maj. Tom Hines, but failed to overtake him. It was said in Bowling Green that Hines made a lucky escape, for those Green river boys of the 26th shoot both right and left-handed, and cross-eyed."

December 4th, Gen. Schofield ordered the 26th to Nashville, and complaint was made that Bowling Green would be left without protection. At that time Gen. Thomas was holding the lines at Nashville, with Hood in his front. December 7th the 26th went to Nashville, and was placed in the 1st Brigade (Gen. Cooper), 2d Division, 23d Corps. December 15th and 16th it engaged in the battle of Nashville, moving with the 23d Corps, under Gen. Schofield, on the flank of Hood's army, and joining in the general charge on Hood's lines, which broke up and destroyed that army. The regiment being at that time in command of Col. Maxwell, who made the report of its service.

After the battle of Nashville the 26th marched with the 23d Corps through Franklin and Columbia to Clifton, on the Tennessee river, being in command of Col. Fairleigh. There taking transports, proceeded down the Tennessee and up the Ohio to Cincinnati; from thence by rail to Washington City and Alexandria, Va. Then taking ocean steamer the 26th went with the 23d Corps to Fort

Fisher, at the mouth of Cape Fear river, arriving there in January, 1865. Fort Fisher had been taken, but there were strong defenses between that point and Wilmington, twenty miles up the river. To flank these defenses the 26th, with other troops of the 23d Corps, under Gen. J. D. Cox, were transported down the coast to Smithville. Landing there, the march was through the pine forests to the rear of Wilmington. On the way the 26th fought severely at Fort Anderson and Town Creek, and was the first regiment to enter Wilmington, February 22, 1865, led by Col. Fairleigh. From Wilmington the regiment moved by way of Kinston to Goldsboro, when Schofield's forces united with Sherman's, and the 26th moved with the army toward Raleigh. On the march a courier rode down the lines shouting that Lee had surrendered. Capt. Brown says: "Pandemonium broke loose, hats in the air, guns in the woods, bands playing, old veterans crying for joy; and soon drawn up in line, the men heard the words of old Sherman: 'A little more toil, a little more labor, and we will march home.'" "Arriving at Raleigh," says Capt. Brown, "we remained until the surrender of Johnston, and from there were sent to Salisbury, N. C., and encamped until July, when we were ordered to Kentucky and mustered out, July 10, 1865, at Louisville."

Many of the officers of this regiment deserve special mention. Gen. Burbridge is mentioned in a separate sketch. Col. Cicero Maxwell was a most intelligent and excellent officer, and was kept in command of the District of Southwestern Kentucky, with headquarters at Bowling Green, through the year 1864. He led his regiment in the battle of Nashville, December 15 and 16, 1864, and remained in the service until in 1865.

Col. Thos. B. Fairleigh was for a long time in command of the post at Louisville, though he also was with his regiment when it was in active field service. He resided in Louisville after the war, and was one of the leading lawyers of the city. He was a most accomplished officer.

Capt. Netter became colonel of the 15th Cavalry, and was killed at Owensboro. Capt. Albert N. Keigwin became a distinguished Presbyterian minister after the war. Adjt. Richard Vance was a most accomplished officer. Col. Hackett, Majors Mattingly and Ashcraft, Captains S. D. Brown, John W. Belt, Surg. E. O. Brown and Chaplain W. M. Grubbs, and others, are all worthy of special mention.

Twenty-seventh Kentucky Volunteer Infantry.

BY COL. JOHN H. WARD.

Before Kentucky as a state had called for any soldiers to sustain the Union cause, and perhaps before there was more than one organized regiment at Camp Dick Robinson on Kentucky soil, Maj. W. T. Ward, Edward H. Hobson and John H. Ward visited that camp. The night they arrived, Gen. Nelson (then the trusted agent of President Lincoln) sent for Maj. Ward, whom he knew as a former soldier in the war with Mexico. The next day Maj. Ward went to Washington city, and was commissioned as a brigadier-general of volunteers, and given authority to raise three regiments of infantry. About the 20th of September, 1861, he opened camp for recruits at Greensburg, Ky., within 24 miles of Gen. Buckner's rebel forces at Munfordville, with whom he had many encounters, losing men in killed, wounded and prisoners before we had a regimental organization and often before the company to which the men were attached had been organized. Many of our recruits came from inside the rebel lines, or very near to them, and had to fight on the way to camp. We had no arms except our private ones, and a few Home Guard muskets. We had no countenance from the state, as the governor (Magoffin) was in sympathy with the South, and no money except what we furnished from our own means, and they very limited. The men being without money wanted to leave one small month's pay with their families.

So we furnished that much to each recruit as long as we could, thus getting twenty or thirty men for a company, and forming a nucleus. We had no quartermaster nor commissary stores except what we gathered from the country, and for which we gave receipts to the people. I do not see how troops could have greater difficulties to encounter; certainly the men behaved as well as men could under the circumstances. Afterward, when the military commission was formed, and attempted to furnish some things to us, we thought ourselves well off by contrast. And as recruits were brought in, those who were in camp, and had left the $13.00 of first month's pay with their needy families and received another month's pay for services, would loan it to their officers to be advanced to other recruits when they came in too fast for the small sums furnished by the military commission for that purpose. Here was tried and true patriotism that people and soldiers outside the border states knew nothing about. Under these difficulties, with the name of Gen. Ward to assist, Lieut. Col. John H. Ward and Maj. James Carlisle recruited from the counties of Casey, Green, Taylor, Hart and Nelson, five companies, Col. C. D. Pennebaker with the aid of Col. Alfred Allen, and Mr. Larkin Proctor, recruited five other companies in Hardin, Grayson, Breckinridge and Meade counties, and also a few men were sent to us from about Covington; some of them coming from Madisonville, Ohio. It will be observed that this regiment had only nine companies in service. This will illustrate some of its difficulties. Capt Lawrence H. Rousseau had written authority from Col. Ward to recruit a company for this regiment; he did so, and reported for orders and was ordered to come into camp, and perhaps started to do so. But about that time Gen. Zollicoffer entered Eastern Kentucky, with a rebel army, and Capt. Rousseau found it easier to reach Col. Hoskins' camp then recruiting the 12th Ky. Infantry. He went there and served with him during that crisis. Col. Hoskins wished to retain him. Col. Ward appealed to Gen. Sherman, then in command of the District of Kentucky, and the general said: "You are entitled to the company, but d—n it, neither of you shall have it," yet the company remained with Col. Hoskins and became Company C of the 12th Ky. Infantry.*

The 27th Ky., rendezvoused at Elizabethtown, Ky., then went into camp at Grayson Springs, for most of the winter, '61-'62; part of it was with Gen. Mitchell's forces when Bowling Green was occupied in the spring of 1862. Then it was camped for a time at Mud River Lock on Green river, and went from there to the field of Shiloh, arriving after the battle and assisting in removing the dead. It was attached to the brigade of Gen. W. B. Hazen in Gen. Nelson's division. We had our first brigade drills on the field of Shiloh, with blood dried in pools in many places and after a rain emitting an unpleasant odor. We were with Gen. Nelson's division when it occupied Corinth. Then to Iuka and Rienzi, Miss., and to Tuscumbia and Florence and Athens, Ala. And on the march of Buell's army to Louisville, Ky., in the summer of 1862. In September, pursued Bragg out of the state by way of London, Ky. We were at the battle of Perryville with Gen. Crittenden's forces, but only engaged in skirmishing as the fight was to our left. After Bragg's retreat, we returned with Buell to the south, via Glasgow, Ky., and Gallatin, Tenn., and with the army to Stone's river. We were sent from here back to Munfordville, Ky., to recruit and were engaged in fights about that

* While the 27th was being organized, a call was made for 32 picked men to go on a scout from Greensburg, Ky., October 10, 1861, they were armed with new Enfield rifles and mounted. They started at 4 p. m. After crossing Green river, the company proceeded into Hart county. Being fired on by a picket, they dismounted and went forward. They soon heard the command "halt." In the darkness the men formed in line and cocked their muskets. Instantly a fire was poured into them from a force of about fifty men concealed along the fence, not four yards away. Tom Burch was killed, Capt. Smith Taylor mortally wounded, six others were wounded. There was but the one volley, when both sides retreated. Among the wounded was L. P. N. Landrum, who received six balls in his body, and was left for dead. He slowly recovered, however, and, though crippled from his wounds, he became one of the leading tobacco merchants of Louisville.

The incident is known as the "Cy. Hutchinson affair," and is mentioned to illustrate the fact that the Kentucky sodiers, even before organization into their regiments, were actively employed against the enemy.

place. In September, 1863, we were mounted and sent to join Burnside in East Tennessee. Col. Ward commanding the regiment and Col. Pennebaker the brigade.

September 25th we joined Gen. Manson at Glasgow, Ky., from whence the march was through Cumberland county, Ky., crossing the Cumberland river at Neelies' Ferry; thence through Albany, Ky., into Fentress county, Tenn. On the 4th of October we crossed Clinch river, and marched to the city of Knoxville. October 7th we passed through Knoxville and went up the Tennessee Valley as far as Rutledge. From thence we moved rapidly back through Knoxville to Loudon, on the south side of Tennessee river.

Our cavalry forces had been repulsed the previous day at Philadelphia. The 27th joined them and other mounted infantry in another attack on that place, and found there a strong force of infantry and artillery, and could make no impression upon them.

Next day all our forces were ordered to cross the Tennessee river and fall back upon Knoxville.

On the march, the 27th was ordered to go about three miles east of the main command to Leiper's Ferry, where we were to recross to the south side of the river and hold the enemy in check on that side, and slowly fall back to Knoxville. Arriving at the ferry, I found a small boat, capable of carrying only twelve men and horses. I reported this by courier, and that the regiment could not be gotten over that night. I put over Company D, while awaiting the courier's return. I then received orders to leave Company D on that side, and let it hold out as skirmishers as long as it could, and to hasten to Knoxville, cross there on the pontoon bridge, and come down to join it. We started at once, but had gone only a short distance when a courier from the ferry informed me that Company D had been attacked by a heavy force and would be captured unless reinforced.

We returned as fast as our horses could go, dismounted, and were soon firing across the river and had another company under the bank on the south side as quickly as the small boat and a canoe could carry them over, then another company, and then to show our severely pressed men that we were all coming, if necessary, I sent Company C with the colors, under Capt. Baily—acting as major—and Adjt. J. B. Speed, with orders for Baily with Company C to charge a hill to their left from which the enemy kept up a fire upon us as we crossed in the boats. Thinking they were skirmishers, we expected to drive them away.

Company C was quickly on the hill, but just over the crest, in place of a skirmish line they found a rebel regiment. The company was driven back to the river bank where the other two companies lay, with their flanks protected by the regiment's fire across the stream upon any enemy that might try to reach them by approaching up or down stream under the bluff banks. It had now begun raining steadily, was cold, and the boat, in taking the last company over, had broken an oar, so there was no retreat. Col. Ward crossed in a canoe, and as he gained the south bank, a force of mounted men, wearing blue overcoats, came down the road. Lieut. Roff and Adjt. Speed, feeling sure it was Company D joining us, rushed toward them throwing up their caps and cheering, when they were startled by an order to surrender. They did not do so, but lost no time in joining us under the river bank. There were two regiments of rebels in front of us, and from the firing on the wooded cliff below us and not one-eighth of a mile off, there was another, no doubt. Our situation was desperate—three companies fronting three regiments, a cold rain falling, the river full, not enough ammunition, and the oar to our only boat broken, and no known means to make another. We believed we were doomed; luckily, the small stream meandering through the meadow in front of us was overflowing, and no line of battle could form across it. The enemy could only charge us in column. They tried that three times, but our aim was too good, and they had to give it up. Yet, the forces on the hills above and below could see how few had crossed, and, as soon as dark gave them cover, they would doubtless charge and overpower us. The flag must be saved, but the boat with the broken oar was on the opposite side of the rapid and cold stream—could any man swim it without taking cramp and drowning? It was more than doubtful. The color-bearer, Sergt. Jno. T. Defevers, was fully informed, and agreed to try to save the colors as soon as it was dark, as then we expected the attack, and he might hope to escape the enemy's shots as he swam over. He tied the flag to two rails, so it would float even if he sank and at dark, at the word, moved, into the cold water, with many chances against him reaching the other side. We waited in silence for the charge that must overpower us; soon we heard our brave color sergeant nearing the other bank—and all right—for he was cursing the boatman for not getting some sort of an oar and coming back to us. Soon the boat came, and the canoe. These could not take us all; if the enemy heard part leaving, those left were certain to be killed or made prisoners.

Col. Ward ordered Adjt. Speed to ask for eight men to volunteer from each of the three companies to remain with the colonel as a body guard while the rest were taken over. The men to recross the river, as they left the line, were to leave every cartridge with the twenty-four volunteers, as they would need it all, and more. Arrangements were soon made, the men were silently in the boat and canoe. In a whisper Col. Ward said: "Adjutant, send back for us at once." Speed said: "Colonel, I am not going to leave you." The colonel replied: "Do you then refuse to obey orders?" "No," said the adjutant, "but in giving orders these twenty-four men who have volunteered to stay with you, if you raise your voice, so they can hear, the enemy will also hear and they will charge; and you will all be killed or captured. We can save them if the boat can return in time. I will go to one end of the line, and you to the other, and we will leave the center to the last—it is their only hope." The colonel said: "There is no time to discuss, take your place, and do as you have said." The boats were gone, and the orders were for each man left to fire at any flash of an enemy's gun. We had spared our shots during the day; now twenty-four shots rang out every time one came from the enemy—they thought we were being reinforced and did not charge us. The boat and canoe returned, and soon we had the river between us and the enemy, with a loss of seven men prisoners in Company C's hill charge. But our horses had been moved, we could not find them, and it constantly grew colder. Wet, and without food, we were nearly frozen before we could get fires, and daylight was welcome indeed when it came, and we fell back toward Knoxville. As we fell back, however, we had to fight an overwhelming force. In these fights, through three days, we suffered severe loss. In one of them Gen. Sanders, commanding the cavalry, fell, and a most valuable officer was lost to our army.

Again the 27th, with Wolford's division of cavalry was sent to the south side of the river, and this regiment with the 1st Ky. Cavalry, the 12th Ky. Cavalry and artillery, occupied the southeastern fort of the line of forts around Knoxville. This fort was known during the siege as Fort Ward, for Col. Ward, who was in command of it, and here his regiment with other troops and artillery sustained a charge, the same morning that the rebels met with the famous defeat at the fort just across the river known afterward as Fort Sanders. After the siege, where nearly all of our horses were starved to death, we moved after Longstreet to Bean's Station, East Tennessee, where the 27th Ky. Infantry was placed in reserve in the large brick building which had been a hotel, at the crossroads. Gen. Jas. M. Shackelford's cavalry had been pressing Longstreet's cavalry and had a sharp engagement about dark, and it was plain that we should have more fighting next day. Our cavalry was formed and moved forward soon after sunrise, but in place of encountering cavalry as we had expected, we found infantry and artillery in our front, and it was evident that we had more than we could manage. Our line first gave way on our extreme right when Col. Ward was ordered to send five companies to reenforce it, but there was no withstanding the force in our front; our line was slowly but steadily forced back. After keeping up the fight until in the afternoon, our whole line that had been a fourth of a mile in front of the hotel was driven past it, and the four companies of the 27th Ky. were left much in advance of all our other forces between the two armies. A section of our artillery was on an eminence to our rear a short distance, and held the rebel lines in check for sometime, until the rebels placed three sections of artillery so that they could concentrate a fire on the position it held, when it too was forced to retire. For some time the four companies were alone in front of Longstreet's army; yet they received no orders to retreat. They had not fired a shot and no shots had been fired into the building. Soon a regiment with colors flying passed about two hundred yards in front of the hotel. The walls had been pierced with loop holes and the men and officers all placed in position. A few shots were exchanged between this regiment and the four companies of the 27th; and then we could see a second regiment with the rebel colors passing to our left, and yet a third regiment with colors and in fine order moving directly upon our front. This third regiment made a fine appearance as there was no obstruction between it and the hotel except a frame building about one hundred yards nearer it, and in which was Co. A, of the 27th Ky., which was ordered to fire the building when forced to leave it. Col. Ward saw that the object was for the regiment in his front to engage him, while the other two should join in his rear and cut off his retreat; this was understood by the officers and men also. And while there appeared small chance to escape, the companies could not leave without orders or overpowering force. The regiment in front of the four companies of the 27th advanced and the artillery in our rear opened upon it, and twice knocked down its colors, yet they were upheld almost instantly. As this regiment came within about two hundred yards and laid down, evidently to avoid artillery fire, and to rest for the final rush on the hotel, Col. Ward ordered his men to place their sights at two hundred yards and try a shot or two at them, to see whether that was the proper position for the sights. It was, and these few shots called the attention of the rebel artillery to the fact that their enemy yet held the hotel, and soon the three sections were sending shells through the building. Our artillery had already been driven from its position. About the same time the regiment in our front arose and charged down upon us, and for some thirty minutes perhaps, the men in that old brick hotel with a tin roof were in the midst of as much noise as could be imagined. The rebel cannon first shot too high and knocked the upper walls and chimney over on to the roof, but soon they got our range, and sent shells through and through the rooms occupied by us, which bursting in and about the building, with out rifles cracking constantly, and the rebel regiment, then in or behind a long stable just across the road, pouring a fire into us, made as hot a time as could well be.

After severe loss, in killed and wounded, Capt. Baily of Company C, said to Col. Ward: "I think we should retreat, no one can expect you to hold this position longer under the circumstances." Col. Ward, replied: "It looks captain, as though our force was surprised by meeting infantry and artillery in place of cavalry and it may be we are left here to be captured while the other forces escape, like a tub is sometimes thrown to a whale." Capt. Baily said: "We are certainly cut off, so we can get no orders to retreat, and I think you owe it to our men to use your own judgment and not let them be sacrificed." The colonel replied: "It may be you are right, we will hold out fifteen minutes longer, and then if no order comes, I will act on my own judgment." The time passed and the men were sent out in the dusk from the side door of the hotel, and told to rally at a certain ravine. They were so few, that the rebels who saw them thought they were only those who were skulking and did not fire, until Col. Ward and Adjt. Speed on horseback followed, when they opened fire on them, but it was getting so dark no damage was done. A regiment of Michigan cavalry had been sent with orders for Col. Ward to retreat, but it came in contact with one of the rebel regiments that passed his flank, and in the dusk and bushes they were each cautious, and their fighting gave Col. Ward and his four companies time to pass before the gap closed, that would have made him and them prisoners. After this the 27th marched on foot to Cumberland Gap, and then into Lee county Va., where they camped for a time, and then were ordered to Mt. Sterling, Ky., to be remounted. After reaching there Col. Ward, who did not like the mounted service, got an order sending him to join Sherman's army then beginning its advance upon Atlanta. The regiment joined the army at Pumpkin Vine creek, Ga., and was with it in its almost continued battle from there until the fall of Atlanta, being in Strickland's brigade, Hascall's division, 23d Army Corps.

After the fall of Atlanta, as the 27th Ky. had already served over three years, it was sent back to Owensboro, Ky., to drive out the guerrillas in that part of the state, and reduce the country to order. The regiment here won a fine name for discipline and order even from the most decided rebels, and it was probably as well disciplined as any volunteer regiment in the Union army. Col. Ward, though starting as lieutenant-colonel after Col. Pennebaker resigned, was commissioned colonel, but was not mustered as such, as the orders then required a regiment to contain eight hundred men before it could have a colonel mustered. The reports show that the 27th was in all the engagements of the 23d Corps during the months of May, June, July and August, participating in the fighting at Pumpkin Vine creek, Dallas, Kennesaw, and many other places. Crossing the Chattahoochee, we were in the battles around Atlanta. The loss of the regiment in the campaign was sixty-six killed and wounded.

The men who composed the 27th Ky. were young, many of them minors. They were from the country districts of Green river, and unfamiliar with everything military. Yet they were hardy and active, used to horseback riding and handling the rifle. There is a popular opinion that city boys are the best material for soldiers, but they could not be better than that composing this regiment. Within a year from enlistment the men were ready for any duty, and were as fine a body of soldiers as could be found in the service, patient under discipline, cheerfully enduring fatigue and exposure and exhibiting everywhere a bravery that was superb.

The foregoing is the tribute of Col. Ward to his men. The writer of these sketches will add that the efficiency of the regiment was largely due to the excellence of its officers. Under the lead of Cols. Pennebaker and Ward, it could not fail to become a splendid organization. Col. Ward's continuous presence with the men was unusual. The regiment was never under fire, nor drilled as a battalion that Col. Ward was not in command, and a more gallant officer could not be found. Since the war he has shown the excellent qualities he displayed as a soldier. The adjutant of the regiment was James B. Speed, then and now a resident of Louisville. Though he was then under twenty years of age; he showed his efficiency as an officer, and gave evidence of the strong characteristics of his later manhood, which have placed him at the head of the business men of Louisville.

Twenty-eighth Kentucky Infantry.

The 28th Ky. Infantry was recruited and organized at Louisville, Ky., by Col. Wm. P. Boone. The first recruiting that was done at Louisville was for companies of home guards. Some of these companies went into Camp Joe Holt across the river, while others remained in Louisville, and did not go into the United States service until the days of neutrality were passed. Col. Boone had been very active during the spring and early summer of 1861 organizing companies of guards under the authority of the City of Louisville. By an ordinance of the city council a regiment of these guards was raised and drilled as early as 1861. Col. Boone commanded the companies belonging to the west end and Col. Curran Pope commanded those in the east end. Many men from these companies went over to Camp Joe Holt, and were there when the Confederates, under Gen. Buckner, came into the state in September and threatened Louisville. Gen. Rousseau led the companies from Camp Joe Holt, Louisville, to Muldraugh's Hill, where they remained several days, and then returned in September.

Upon the return of the Home Guards from Muldraugh's Hill in September, 1861, Col. Wm. P. Boone, then a member of the legislature from Louisville, having been elected in August, and who had been active in organizing the Home Guards, was authorized to raise a regiment for the United States service. Nearly the whole of six or seven of the Home Guard companies promptly enlisted under him, and others joining with them, the 28th regiment of Ky. Vol. Infantry was formed. Associated with Col. Boone was Lieut. Col. A. Y. Johnson, of Louisville, and J. Rowan Boone, son of the colonel, a young man of great spirit, who subsequently commanded the regiment.

About the 1st of October, Col. Boone obtained tents and went into camp at Shepherdsville. In December, the regiment went to New Haven. In the year 1862 it was used to guard the L. & N. railroad. In June four companies were on the Lebanon branch and other companies were at Bowling Green and Franklin, Ky. The regiment was assigned to Dumont's brigade, Buell's army. In July two companies with Col. Boone were at Gallatin, Tenn., and being scattered at different points along the railroad, 120 men, with Col. Boone himself, were captured by Gen. John H. Morgan.

This affair was investigated at the time by Capt. Walworth Jenkins, of the regular army, who relieved Col.

Boone from blame. Lieut. Col. I. W. Scott was afterwards appointed to investigate further and the examination showed that Col. Boone had sent out a detachment the evening before to co-operate with a force sent out by Col. S. D. Bruce, which weakened Col. Boone's force at Gallatin. Col. Scott found that this was "properly done and for good reasons, and that there was a high order of discipline in his regiment, that he was remarkably vigilent and industrious. . . . That he made every effort to obtain reinforcements and to have a stockade built but without success." That his small force "could not, with any prospect of success, have fought 1,200 or 1,500 of the enemy."

"On the whole," says he, "I can see in this case no want of zeal or gallantry on the part of Col. Boone and no reason why he should not be freed from all blame or censure in this unfortunate affair."

He also says "with regard to Capt. Hughes, the proof is abundant that he was vigilant and attentive to his duties, and therefore I consider that he was not to blame for his conduct in the transaction."

This report was signed by Lieut. Col. I. W. Scott, 5th Ky. Cavalry, and by Lieut. Col. A. M. Stout, 17th Ky. Infantry.

Col. Boone being absolved from any blame, and being soon after exchanged, was with his command at Clarksville.

At Clarksville and Columbia, by order of Gen. Rosecrans, the regiment was mounted. For a number of months it was on excessively hard duty as mounted infantry, being moved from point to point in the state of Tennessee and engaging in many skirmishes and encounters with the enemy. It served with Rosecrans' army in all its operations up to and including the battle of Chickamauga.

Being mounted, the regiment was employed in scouting and outpost duty, being on the flanks of the army and associated with the cavalry.

In Janury, 1864, it re-enlisted in the veteran organization, and was kept on continuous duty about Chattanooga. January 21st, Col. Wm. P. Boone in command of a detachment consisting of the 28th Ky., under Col. J. Rowan Boone, and the 4th Michigan, made a reconnoissance from Rossville through McLemore's Cave to Dug Gap, twenty-five miles south of Chattanooga. The next day crossing Pigeon Mountain he moved to Summerville, and then toward Dalton, where he attacked and routed a force of the enemy, capturing prisoners and arms and other property. He returned on the 25th to Rossville. This expedition was mentioned in complimentary terms in Gen. Thomas' report.

During the month of February, the 28th, Col. W. P. Boone commanding, remained under Gen. Thomas, south of Chattanooga, picketing the roads in the direction of Lafayette, Resaca and Dalton. In March it was sent to Pulaski, Tenn., where it was associated with the 2d Ky. Cavalry. In April it returned to the vicinity of Chattanooga, and was stationed at Lee and Gordon's Mills. April 18th it was transferred by order of Gen. Thomas from the 14th Corps to the 4th Corps, and assigned to Wagner's brigade, 2d division. At that time it was dismounted, and under that assignment served through the Atlanta campaign.

In this celebrated campaign the regiment was commanded by the youthful and gallant Col. J. Rowan Boone, and participated in all the battles from the beginning to the end.

In the great charge at Kennesaw Mountain, the 28th, together with the 40th Indiana, took a leading part. Col. J. Rowan Boone, though wounded, refused to leave the field. In a charge near Pine Mountain the regiment lost four men killed and twelve wounded. In the month of June the killed and wounded of the 28th aggregated fifty-six.

The injuries Col. Boone received at Kennesaw required him to relinquish the command for a time to Maj. Barth, under whose lead the regiment crossed the Chattahoochee and participated in the battle of Peachtree creek, and the other battles around Atlanta, until the capture of that place, September 2d.

The month of September was spent in camp near Atlanta. During October the 28th participated in the pursuit of Hood in Northern Georgia. In November it was sent back to Tennessee with the 4th Corps to engage in the campaign against Hood, under Gen. Thomas. The 28th Ky. performed most valuable service in this celebrated campaign.

In the month of November, 1864, Gen. Thomas being in command in Nashville, advanced the 4th and 23rd Army Corps to Pulaski, Tenn., to oppose the expected movement northward of Gen. Hood. Toward the last of the month Gen. Hood endeavored to occupy Columbia, but Schofield fell back to that place and held it. Hood then attempted to gain Schofield's rear by sending a strong force to occupy Spring Hill, a little village on the turnpike leading northward from Columbia. Schofield being advised of this movement sent a force of 5,000, under Gen. Stanley, to intercept it. The 28th Ky. was with this force, under its gallant leader, Col. J. Rowan Boone. Spring Hill was held, and the 28th Ky. aided in holding it. Few events of the war have been more discussed than the question why Hood's men did not occupy this, and thus prevent Schofield from retiring by the turnpike road. Hood laid the blame on Gen. Cheatham, but Cheatham declares he obeyed orders in resting for the night without attacking, and that Hood himself was responsible. The answer given to the question by Gen. Walter Whitaker is undoubtedly the true one. He says: "The reason they did not get on that pike was because I was there myself." The truth is Stanley occupied the coveted place with 5,000 men, among whom was Gen. Whitaker's command and also the 28th Ky. Col. Boone was sent forward with his regiment, with others, to check Hood's advance upon Spring Hill. He deployed his men with great skill, and stubbornly fought the advancing Confederates, suffering serious loss, but delaying the advance until darkness came on that short November day, and the prize for which Hood was striving eluded his grasp.

The day following (November 30th) the 28th Ky. formed part of Schofield's rear guard as his army hurried on to Franklin. At Franklin two brigades of the 4th Corps—Lane's and Conrad's—were posted across the turnpike about a third of a mile in front of the main line of defense. The 28th Ky. was with Lane's brigade. It was not intended that these two brigades should make any stand in case of an assault. They were placed there to observe and to be used in the event that Hood should endeavor to make a flank movement across Harpeth river. By a mistake of orders, however, they did stand, and as Hood's whole army came sweeping forward in an instant, these brigades were enveloped and compelled to retire precipitously to the main line. They suffered serious losses in so doing. Reaching the main line with the inrushing Confederates close upon them, great confusion ensued, and for a little while the central key point of the line was broken. The men on the line at that place (Ruger's division of the 23rd Corps and a portion of Riley's division, 23rd Corps) rallied and steadied themselves, and Lane's and Conrad's men uniting with them, and assisted by Opdycke's brigade and other troops which were hurried to the point of danger by Gen. J. D. Cox, commanding on the line, the defense was complete and Hood's grand assault proved a failure. In this terrible battle the 28th Ky. bore its part with great gallantry. The stand of the 28th on the main line refutes the statement often made that Opdycke's brigade alone stood the shock. The statement is wholly without foundation. Ruger's division was there and fought, the brigades of Lane and Conrad were also rallied there in great part. The reserves of Riley's division, which included the 12th and 16th Ky. Vet. Infantry, rushed to the breach and Gen. Cox ordered up two other regiments from other parts of the line. All these troops contended together to resist the furious assaults of Hood's veteran army. Col. Rowan Boone and his regiment should be given a full share of the credit for the successful defense of Franklin. After this fierce and bloody struggle, the 28th proceeded that night with Schofield's army to Nashville. Two weeks later it participated in the great battle of Nashville. There the 4th Corps charged Hood's lines on each of the two days' fight and the 28th Ky., under Col. Rowan Boone, is mentioned in the reports in the most complimentary terms. Col. Boone says, in his report: "The officers and men of the regiment sustained the reputation they had long before established." He says, also, speaking of the second day's charge: "The line was formed, the order given and received with the same exhibition of confidence that had characterized them the day before, and they dashed toward the enemy's works, passing the entanglements and abatis, cleared the works and captured many prisoners, all of whom were ordered to the rear, and the regiment continued the pursuit of the flying and demoralized enemy."

From the field at Nashville the regiment proceeded to Huntsville, Ala., and from thence it was ordered to Texas, where it remained until December, 1865. Returning from Texas it was mustered out of service January 1, 1866, after long and arduous service, first under its noble and heroic leader, Col. Wm. P. Boone, and afterward under his gifted son, the gallant young Col. J. Rowan Boone. The services of those two officers, father and son, deserve a much more extended mention than can here be given. Both were men of the highest talents and character. Col. Wm. P. Boone entered the service at the beginning and gave to it all the energy of his strong and vigorous nature. He led his regiment until his health compelled him to yield the command to his son. Under the younger colonel the regiment continued to the end. Both were typical soldiers, military in bearing, and noble specimens of physical manhood. Both have died since the war, and are buried side by side in Cave Hill Cemetery. They belonged to the historic Boone family, Col. Wm. P. Boone's grandfather being a first cousin of Daniel Boone.

Col. A. Y. Johnson, who was associated with Col. Boone in raising the 28th, became incapacitated for field service by injuries received and was placed in the veteran reserve corps. For a time he was in charge of veteran reserves at Camp Holt, and from thence was ordered to Washington, where he remained on duty until the close of the war. He now resides in Louisville.

The surgeon of the 28th was Dr. Alfred W. Hynes, of Bardstown. His sons, Blythe and Alfred, were officers in the Union army; and Howard, in the Confederate army. Dr. Hynes was also brigade surgeon. He was an eminent man in his profession.

Twenty-ninth Kentucky Infantry.

The 29th Regiment Kentucky Volunteer Infantry was consolidated with the 6th Ky. Cavalry and other regiments.

Thirtieth Kentucky Mounted Infantry.

On the 7th of February, 1863, it was enacted by the Congress of the United State: "That the governor of Kentucky, by the consent and under the direction of the President of the United States, shall have power to raise and organize into regiments a volunteer force, not exceeding 20,000 rank and file, to be raised within the State of Kentucky, to serve for the term of twelve months, to be employed within the limits of Kentucky in repelling invasion, suppressing insurrection and guarding and protecting the public property. Provided that at any time it may be necessary, in the discretion of the President of the United States, these troops may be employed outside of the limits of Kentucky against the enemies of the United States."

At this time Bragg's army was in Tennessee, and all the eastern part of that state was in the possession of the Confederates. Kentucky was a rich and inviting section for invasion by larger or smaller bodies of Confederates. It was essentially necessary that it should be guarded and protected. The Louisville & Nashville railroad was the only railroad through the state, and over it all supplies for the Federal forces in Tennessee had to pass. There were military stores and munitions of war in Kentucky; also bridges along turnpike roads and railroads. All these had to be protected, and a large force was necessary.

This condition led to the enactment of the law just quoted, and as it was in 1861, when Kentucky troops sprang at once to the protection of the state, so it was in 1863. Eleven regiments promptly organized, under the authority to raise not exceeding 20,000 troops.

One of the first to organize was the 30th Ky. Mounted Infantry. The following account is taken from the adjutant-general's report:

"The 30th Ky. Mounted Infantry was organized under the 20,000 call, and was mustered into the United States service for one year. Companies A, B, E and F were mustered in at Frankfort, Ky., February 19, 1864, and Company G March 29, 1864, by Capt. Charles H. Fletcher, 1st United States Infantry, and Companies C, D, H, I and K were mustered in at Camp Burnside, Ky., April 5, 1864, by Maj. J. C. Henderson, 45th Ky. Infantry.

"The difficulties attending the organization of this regiment, owing to the constant presence of guerrillas and small raiding parties, made it exceedingly dangerous for the recruiting officers to leave any of the garrisoned posts, and retarded their operations a great deal. Companies A, B, E, F and G were raised originally as a battalion to protect the capital of the state, and were to be mustered into the service of the state for one year; but the exigencies of the service demanded, at this time, every available soldier that could be raised, and the War Department ordered that they should be mustered into the United States service, in order that they could be ordered by the commanding general to any portion of the state where their services were required. This order at first created some little dissension, but, by the prompt action of the officers, it was soon organized and became one of the most efficient one-year regiments in the service.

"In the battle of Cynthiana, June 10, 1864, with Morgan's men, Maj. Thomas Mahoney was severely wounded while gallantly leading his men. In the battle of Saltville, Va., October 2, 1864, this regiment lost two officers killed—1st Lieut. Cutsinger, of Company G, and 2d Lieut. Vickery, of Company C, and Captains Bacon, of Company E; Brownlee, of Company F, and Searcy, of Company G, were severely wounded. It was constantly engaged throughout its term of enlistment in clearing different portions of the state of the predatory bands and guerrillas. Being mounted, this regiment moved with great expedition to different portions of the state, and attacked the enemy in many instances by surprise.

"It has participated in the following battles and skirmishes, viz.: Lexington, Ky., Cynthiana, Ky., Shelby county, Ky., Saltville, Va., October 2, 1864; Saltville, Va., December, 1864; Marion, Va., New Market, Ky., Laurel Gap, Clinch Mountain, Seven-Mile Ford, Va.; Owen county, Ky., Kingsport, Tenn., Brush Creek, Tenn., Chaplintown, Ky., Bradfordsville, Ky., Marion county, Ky., and Albany, Ky."

In addition to the foregoing, the following facts have been gathered from the official reports:

In the organization of the Department of the Ohio, April 30, 1864, the 30th was in Gen. E. H. Hobson's division, and brigaded with the 45th and 47th and 49th Ky., and a Wisconsin battery, Col. John Mason Brown's brigade. Though at that time four companies of the regiment, with Col. Alexander, were under Gen. S. S. Fry, at Point Burnside, Ky. In the Saltville expedition the loss of the 30th in killed was five.

June 30, 1864, the 30th was transferred from Brown's brigade to the brigade under Col. Charles S. Hanson, and was at Lexington, Ky. September 3, 1864, it was reported from the headquarters at Lexington that three hundred rebels were in the vicinity of Shelbyville, and that Col. Craddock, with the 30th Ky., was after them.

In the organization of the Military District of Kentucky, September 30, 1864, the 30th was in Gen. McLean's division, headquarters at Lexington, and in Col. Charles S. Hanson's brigade.

October 25, 1864, part of the 30th was ordered to Paris, Ky. From Paris it proceeded, with other troops, to East Tennessee, to serve in Gen. Stoneman's command. December 13, 1864, Maj. Gen. Stoneman reports from near Kingsport, East Tenn.: "We left Knoxville on the 10th, overtook Duke's (formerly Morgan's) command yesterday. During the night drove him across the north fork of the Holston river. This morning we crossed the river, attacked and captured nearly the whole command, taking the wagon train. Col. R. C. Morgan, a brother of John, is, with many other officers, a prisoner. All consider this command as completely destroyed. The fighting was done by Gen. Gillem's command and the 30th Ky., of Gen. Burbridge's command."

Stoneman's command then went into Virginia and destroyed the salt and lead works. (See accounts of 12th and 7th Cavalry.)

Returning from this expedition to Kentucky, the 30th again went on duty protecting the state.

December 31, 1864, the 30th was at Louisa, Ky., in the division commanded by Gen. E. H. Hobson. January 6, 1865, it was at Camp Nelson, and two companies that day proceeded to Lebanon. January 10, 1865, it was ordered by Gen. Hobson to Taylor, Green and Barren counties, under Lieut. Col. Craddock.

The regiment was mustered out of service on the 18th day of April, 1865, at Frankfort, Ky.

Thirty-first Kentucky Infantry.

The organization of this regiment was abandoned.

Thirty-second Kentucky Infantry.

The roster of this regiment is given in the adjutant-general's report, but the only account of its career there found is as follows:

"The officers of this regiment failed to furnish a history of its early organization, marches, etc., and the records of the command being very incomplete in the adjutant-general's report, I am unable to give a detailed statement of its operations."

The present writer has not been able to obtain any assistance in making the history of the 32d. What is here presented has been gathered from the official reports.

The regiment was raised by Col. Thomas Z. Morrow in the summer of 1862. The field and staff and all the companies were mustered into service at Camp Burnside, Ky. Company B was mustered in at Frankfort, and Capt. Taylor's company at Louisville.

Before the men were mustered into service the regiment was engaged in active service in the defense of Kentucky against Bragg's invasion in 1862. A portion of the regiment participated in the battle of Perryville, October 8th, being at that time in Terrell's brigade, Jackson's division, and under the immediate charge of Gen. T. T. Garrard. Generals Jackson and Terrell were both killed, but the adjutant-general of the brigade, Capt. W. P. Anderson, U. S. A., reported that Garrard's troops behaved well. After the battle of Perryville the 32d was kept on duty in the state guarding and scouting. In this duty it operated as far west as Hopkinsville. It was also at Danville, Lexington, Somerset, Camp Burnside, Stanford, Lebanon and many other points.

In the organization of the Department of the Ohio under Gen. Burnside, June 30, 1863, the 32d, under Col. Morrow, was in the 1st Brigade, 2d Division; and, July 31, 1863, the same. At that time Gen. Burnside went on the East Tennessee expedition, in which the 32d participated. In November, 1863, it is reported by Gen. O. B. Wilcox at Morristown, East Tennessee. After that date it returned to Kentucky.

Capt. Robert B. Taylor's company appears to have been recruited for the 32d, but before it was mustered into service was consolidated with Company I, of the 22d Ky. Infantry, with which regiment it served for three years.

Since the war Col. Morrow has been one of the most prominent citizens of Kentucky, having been candidate for governor, and having served as circuit judge.

Thirty-third Kentucky Infantry.

This battalion was organized and brought into the field under many difficulties. It was made up of detachments recruited for various different commands, thrown together and organized at Munfordville, Ky., on the 13th day of September, 1862. Company A, and about one-half of Company B, were recruited at Bowling Green under an authority to raise the 35th Infantry. Company C was recruited for the 7th Ky. Cavalry, and had but joined the regiment for muster-in at the period of the fight at Big Hill, in which memorable struggle it participated, and was among the very last to leave the field; its gallant commander, Captain Knight, standing by Col. Metcalfe to the last. On account of the alleged fact that Col. Metcalfe did him injustice, or rather failed to do him justice, in his report of that battle, Capt. Knight refused to be mustered into that regiment, and asked to be transferred to the 33d Infantry, to raise which authority had been given, at a camp established at Munfordville, Ky., under the supervision of Adjt. Jas. A. Dawson, which request was granted. Company C and a portion of Company B were recruited originally for the 33d. Very shortly after the recruiting camp was established by Adjt. Dawson, the invasion of Kentucky by Gen. Bragg's forces occurred, and the recruits in camp promptly tendered their services to Col. Wilder, then in command of the Federal troops at the post of Munfordville. Being familiar with the country they were assigned to picket, vidette and scout duty, and rendered very valuable service. Participating in the battle of Sunday, September 14, 1862, in which Chalmer's division were so severely punished and signally repulsed in an attempt to assault the works, and also in the fight of the following Tuesday, which resulted in the capitulation of the garrison, after the main body of Gen. Bragg's command had surrounded the works and cut off all hopes of the arrival of reinforcements. These recruits were embraced in the surrender, and were paroled. Adjt. Dawson managed to elude the Confederate forces and escaped to Louisville, bearing the first intelligence direct and positive of the capture of the command. After the Confederate forces retreated from Kentucky these recruits were again collected at Munfordville, and such of them as had been paroled were sent to Camp Chase, where they remained for several months, awaiting an exchange, which being ultimately effected, and the recruits for the 35th having been ordered to join them, the battalion was organized as stated above, with Lieut. Col. J. F. Lauck as commanding officer. During the winter of 1862-3, the command remained on post duty at Munfordville, and from that time until the date of consolidation with the 26th Infantry, it rendered active, laborious and efficient service, in various sections of Kentucky, but mainly along the line of the Louisville and Nashville and Lebanon Branch railroads.

Soon after consolidation with the 26th, the active field service of the battalion commenced, and continued without intermission till the expiration of the term of service. It participated in the battle of Nashville, both of the hazardous and exhausting Saltville expeditions and accompanied Gen. Schofield's division to North Carolina, and participated in all the events of that memorable campaign. It is but due to truth to state that, at all times, and under all circumstances, whether in the field, at the post, on the march, or in the din of battle, the officers and men composing this battalion conducted themselves with becoming propriety and gallantry.

In the organization of the Department of the Ohio, December 31, 1863, the 33d was in the district of Southern Central Kentucky, which was commanded by Gen. E. H. Hobson.

This regiment was consolidated with the 26th Regiment Kentucky Volunteer Infantry, April 1, 1864, per Special Order No. 107, of March 5, 1864, from War Department, and constituted Companies F, H, I and K of that regiment. (See Rolls 26th Kentucky Volunteer Infantry.)

Louisville Provost Guard and Thirty-fourth Kentucky Infantry.

In September, 1861, an organization was made at Louisville under Col. Henry Dent, called the Provost Guard of Louisville. It consisted of five companies, of about ninety men each. The authority of the organization was from General Anderson, commanding the Department of Kentucky. It was employed at Louisville, performing guard duty for a little over one year, when the 34th Kentucky Volunteer Infantry was formed out of its material with other added. During the period of its service it guarded over 151,000 prisoners.

The 34th Ky. Infantry was organized October, 1862, and continued to serve as the Provost Guard of Louisville until May, 1863, when it was ordered to the field, and entered upon a career of activity which continued until the muster-out, June, 1865.

The service of this regiment is so well given in the Adjutant's report it is only necessary to quote from it as follows:

"The 34th Infantry was relieved of provost duty at Louisville on the 8th day of May, 1863, and ordered to report to Gen. Judah, at Bowling Green, Ky., where it remained until about the first of July, when it marched to Glasgow, to assist in checking John Morgan in his raid into Kentucky. It did garrison duty at Glasgow until the 28th of September, 1863, when ordered to march via Marrowbone and Burksville, Ky., to Knoxville, Tenn., under command of Gen. Manson, skirmishing with guerrillas nearly every day. From Knoxville it marched to Morristown, where it remained until the battle of Blue Springs, in which it distinguished itself by capturing nearly all of "Mudwall" Jackson's staff, and four hundred and seventy-one of his command. When Longstreet laid siege to Knoxville, Gen. Burnside ordered the 34th to Cumberland Gap from Morristown. After the siege was raised by Gen. Sherman, the 34th was ordered to Tazewell, Tenn., the colonel of the same (Selby Harney) being placed in command of a brigade composed of the 34th Ky., 116th and 118th Ind. Infantry, the 11th Tenn. Infantry and 11th Mich. Battery.

"On the 24th of January, 1864, the rebel Col. Carter attacked Tazewell with about 1,800 men, in which fight the 34th again distinguished itself for undaunted bravery under severe fire. In this engagement, which lasted about three-quarters of an hour, the enemy was repulsed with a loss of thirty-one killed and equally as many wounded. On the 26th of January, the regiment was again ordered to the Gap under command of Gen. T. T. Garrard, where it remained on one-third rations for nearly three weeks. News having been received by the general commanding that an attack would be made on the Gap by Gens. Jones and Vaughn simultaneously approaching in different directions, he ordered fifty-five of the 34th Infantry to proceed to Powell's River bridge, to prevent Vaughn's forces from crossing and forming a junction with Jones. The detachment of the 34th arrived at the bridge just as Vaughn's advance guard was entering it, and repulsed them after a short fight, but they were unable to tear up the floor before the whole force came up. The detachment of the 34th took position in a temporary block house and successfully repelled five charges of the enemy. Being armed with Colt's five-shooters, their small numbers were enabled to contend with this large force and compelled them to retire.

"On the 17th of April, 1864, Gen. Garrard was relieved of the command of the Gap and Col. W. Y. Dillard, of the 34th Ky. remained in command until November 8, 1864, when the 34th was ordered to Knoxville, which was threatened by Gen. Breckinridge from the direction of Strawberry Plains. The regiment was ordered to proceed via Tazewell and Walker's Ford, a road much infested with guerrillas. After arriving at Walker's Ford on Clinch river it was unable to cross owing to high water, and consequently returned to the Gap and took the Jacksboro road. It arrived at Knoxville November 18th. It remained there on provost duty until February 2, 1865, when it was ordered back to the Gap. April 20th it proceeded up the Virginia valley in the direction of Gibson's Mills, where a force of the enemy was reported. On the 22d it was met by a flag of truce and a proposition from Cols. Pridemore, Slemp, Richmond and Wicher, to surrender their forces, which was done, their command numbering 2,713 men.

"On the 24th of April the 34th was again ordered to Knoxville and from thence to Loudon, where it remained on garrison duty until the 20th of June, when it returned to Knoxville for muster-out. It was mustered out at Knoxville June 24, 1865."

Col. Henry Dent was the first provost marshal of Louisville.

Col. Selby Harney was the son of Hon. John H. Harney, of Louisville. After the war he was a practicing lawyer in Louisville.

Col. W. Y. Dillard was one of the active organizers of the Union soldiers at Louisville at the beginning of the war.

Thirty-fifth Kentucky Mounted Infantry.

The 35th Ky. Mounted Infantry was organized on the 26th day of September, 1863, at Owensboro, Ky., under Col. E. A. Starling, and was mustered into the United States service on the 2d day of October, 1863, by Capt. Knight, United States mustering officer. This regiment was recruited under the most difficult circumstances, the state at that time being overrun with guerrillas, making it exceedingly hazardous for officers to recruit and retain their men in camp. From Owensboro it marched to Henderson on the 10th of October, and from thence to Hopkinsville, Ky. During the latter part of the year 1863 it was constantly on the march, guarding the country between the Green and Cumberland rivers, which was infested with many predatory bands of guerrillas. The arduous duties performed by this regiment during its early existence did not afford much time for drill, still, through the indefatigable exertions of its officers, it arrived at a point of excellence in drill and discipline which was the admiration of all who were connected with the regiment and the division to which it was attached.

During the month of August, 1864, this regiment, with others under command of Gen. E. H. Hobson, marched from Elizabethtown in pursuit of the rebel Gen. Adam Johnson, who held possession of the country between the Green and Cumberland rivers. After a long and tedious march, with various skirmishes, they succeeded in driving him out of Kentucky into Tennessee by way of Cadiz.

From Cadiz it returned, via Hopkinsville, to Lexington, and, on the 15th of September, moved in Gen. Burbridge's command in the first expedition on Saltville, Va. It returned to Lexington on the 5th of November, and from there was ordered to Louisville, Ky., where it was mustered out on December 29, 1864.

It participated in the battle of Saltville, Va., and in numerous skirmishes with guerrillas in various portions of Kentucky.

In addition to the foregoing, which is taken from the adjutant-general's report, the official reports show that in the organization of the army of the Ohio, December 31, 1863, the 35th Ky. was in the District of Southern-Central Kentucky, which was commanded by Gen. E. H. Hobson, and was in Col. Cicero Maxwell's brigade. In the same organization of April 30, 1864, it was still in Maxwell's brigade, Gen. Hugh Ewing's division. May 7th Capt. Baker, commanding a detachment of the 35th, had a fight in Meade county, in which he routed a Confederate band under Capt. Hinkle, who was killed. Capt. Baker continued his work in that part of the state, capturing and dispersing similar bands, through the months of June and July. Lieut. Col. Sam F. Johnson, of the 52d Ky., reports Capt. Baker's detachment with him in his movements through Western Kentucky. August 14, 1864, Gen. Hobson reports the 35th at Bardstown, under Col. Starling. August 23d Gen. Hobson sent the following dispatch to Gen. Ewing from near Canton, in Trigg county:

"Rebels were pursued to this point. Col. Johnson, 52d Ky., attacked their rear this morning at daylight; killed fifteen, captured fifty prisoners, one hundred horses and mules. About three hundred succeeded in crossing the river. Colonels True and Burge are pursuing some down north bank of Cumberland river. My forces are picking them up as they pursue. Col. A. R. Johnson lost both eyes; he may recover from his wounds. Col. Starling's regiment, scouting country in vicinity of Princeton, are capturing some prisoners."

These reports show the nature of the duty that had to be performed in 1864 in Kentucky. But for the persistent and active work of the regiments detailed for this service all government property, railroads and bridges in Kentucky would have been destroyed.

When the first expedition to Saltville was made in September, 1864, the 35th was sent from Western Kentucky to accompany that movement. In that expedition the 35th lost twenty-one men. Upon the return it was ordered to Louisville by Gen. McLean, where it was mustered out of service, after a year of continuous duty under its most able and accomplished and patriotic leader, Col. E. A. Starling, and the excellent officers who had entered the service under him.

It may be mentioned in this connection that three brothers, bearing the name of Starling, were notable Kentucky soldiers. Col. Lyne Starling served as chief of staff to Gen. Thos. L. Crittenden. Col. Sam Starling was chief of staff of Gen. Jas. S. Jackson, and was at his side when he fell at Perryville. He was major in the 8th Ky. Cavalry and rode with Shackelford and Bristow in the pursuit of Morgan, July, 1863. Col. Edmund A. Starling raised and led the 35th Ky. Infantry.

Col. E. R. Wier belongs to the distinguished Kentucky family of that name, and, since the war, is a practicing lawyer at Greenville, Ky.

Major Frank H. Bristow, brother of Hon. Benjamin H. Bristow, has been a successful practitioner of law and judge since the Civil War.

Finnis H. Little, who was adjutant of the regiment, is an accomplished lawyer of Owensboro, and has published an excellent biography of Hon. Ben Hardin, of Kentucky.

Thirty-sixth Kentucky Infantry.

The 36th Regiment Ky. Volunteer Infantry was consolidated with the 11th and 14th Ky. Cavalry.

Thirty-seventh Kentucky Infantry.

The necessity for troops in Kentucky led to the organization of the 37th Ky. Infantry, in the summer of 1863. During the greater portion of its term it was mounted, and served as mounted infantry. Companies A, B and C were mustered into service at Glasgow September 17, 1863. D, E, F and G were mustered October 24th at Glasgow. Capt. Stroub's company, which was originally intended for the 51st Ky. Infantry, was mustered into service at Covington September 4th, and afterward consolidated with the 37th as Company H. Companies I and K were mustered at Glasgow December 21st and 22d.

It was while the regiment was thus in process of formation, and being stationed at Glasgow, it first came in conflict with the enemy. Early in October Maj. Martin was in charge of the regiment at Glasgow, and had sent most of the companies out on scouting expeditions, by direction of Gen. Hobson, whose headquarters were then at Munfordville. October 6th, at night, when but few of the 37th were in the camp at Glasgow, the place was attacked by Col. Hughes, and one hundred and forty-two of Maj. Martin's men were captured. Maj. Martin himself escaped capture by fighting his way out, and, rallying the other companies, pursued Col. Hughes beyond Tompkinsville, retaking some of his men and horses and arms. At that time the official reports show that Kentucky was overrun with Confederates, who, in small bands, roamed over the country, destroying property and doing much damage. It was difficult to prevent this irregular warfare, and easy to carry it on. Kentucky had many citizens whose warmest sympathies were with the Southern cause, and these were sufficiently numerous to give roaming bands all the information necessary to enable them to escape the Federal soldiers, or to fall upon weak places. During the winter of 1863-4 the 37th was employed in the southern part of the state for its protection, being in the district of Southern-Central Kentucky, then commanded by Gen. E. H. Hobson.

In March, 1864, it was ordered to Columbia, Ky., where it was under Col. Hanson, and the 13th Ky. Cavalry, under Col. Weatherford, concentrated for the purpose of moving to Eastern Kentucky.

April 30th it was in Hobson's division, in the 3d Brigade, the brigade being commanded by Col. Hanson, and the regiment by Maj. Martin. It continued in this brigade during the summer and fall of 1864.

About June 1, 1864, Col. Hanson's brigade was ordered to Irvine, Ky., to aid in checking the movement of Morgan into Kentucky. Morgan says, in his official report, that his intention was to move through Pound Gap, demonstrate toward Louisa, but really to hurry forward to Lexington, then push for the Louisville & Nashville railroad. Gen. Burbridge being apprised of the coming of Morgan, had his forces well forward in the direction of Pound Gap, being with them in person, and having with him Gen. Hobson and Colonels John Mason Brown, Hanson and other active and vigilant officers. (See accounts of 45th and 52d Regiments.) Morgan eluded these forces and hastened on to Mt. Sterling. There Gen. Hobson had arrived with a small force, which Morgan attacked and captured; but Burbridge's other forces, hurrying up, attacked Morgan near Cynthiana and broke up his company, retaking the prisoners Morgan had taken, and then pursued him through the mountains and out of the state. Col. Hanson's report shows that the 37th bore its full part in these exciting movements, hard marches and frequent encounters.

Early in September, 1864, Gen. Burbridge organized his expedition to Saltville, Va., with which the 37th went in the brigade commanded by Col. Hanson.

It participated in the fighting which occurred on this expedition, in which Col. Hanson was wounded and captured. Col. Hanson was an officer in the 20th Ky. Infantry before he became colonel of the 37th. He is mentioned in the account of the 20th. Among the officers of this regiment were Captains W. O. and Caswell Watts. They were brothers of Col. Elijah Watts, of the 2d Cavalry. They belonged to a Bardstown family, and were all excellent and faithful officers.

Thirty-eighth Kentucky Infantry.

The 38th Regiment of Ky. Volunteer Infantry was consolidated with the 12th Ky. Cavalry.

Thirty-ninth Kentucky Infantry.

The 39th Ky. Infantry was raised by Col. John Dills in the fall of 1862 from the counties along the Big Sandy, being organized in camp at Peach Orchard, when it was mustered into service February 16, 1863. Before it was mustered into service it began a series of fights and skirmishes with the enemy in that section which continued during almost its entire term of service.

November 5th Col. Dills captured the Confederate camp at Piketon taking ninety-five prisoners, one hundred and fifty guns, and many wagons, horses and mules. He then pursued the flying enemy to the vicinity of Pound Gap. At this time Col. Dills reported his men to be efficient soldiers and good marksmen, and thought nothing of marching thirty or forty miles over the mountain roads in twenty-four hours. Gen. H. G. Wright complimented him and his regiment for their gallantry.

December 31st the 39th was again engaged with the enemy four miles from Prestonsburg. In April, 1863, it fought again at Pikeville, and captured Col. French and his command. Col. Gallup, of the 14th Ky. Infantry, who commanded the Federal force in this fight says, in his report: "The 39th is a new regiment, but behaved nobly and unflinchingly under fire." He also says: "Col. Dills, Lieut. Col. Mims, and Col. Ferguson are deserving of great credit for the able manner in which they acquitted themselves and managed the expedition."

July 10th Gen. Julius White, who had been sent to command the forces in Eastern Kentucky, reports a successful fight at Beaver creek, in which the 39th is specially mentioned as taking a number of prisoners and as having "made a charge up the mountain with great gallantry."

In the organization of the Department of the Ohio, June 30, 1863, the 39th was under Col. Dills, in Col. David Cameron's brigade, Gen. Julius White's division. July 11, 1863, the 39th was intrenched with other troops at the mouth of Beaver. At this time a portion of the regiment moved into Virginia to Gladesville with other troops and captured Col. Condil and his command at that place. January 9, 1864, part of the regiment under Capt. King fought at Sherman's Ferry, losing Lieut. Richard D. Coleman killed, and Lieut. Jas. M. Thornbury and several men captured. February 15, 1864, the 39th and 14th, under Col. Gallup, fought at Laurel creek, W. Va., defeating and capturing Col. Ferguson and a number of his men, for which Col. Gallup and his command received congratulatory thanks from the commanding generals. In April, 1864, the 39th under Lieut. Col. Ferguson and associated with other troops, particularly the 14th Ky., fought at various places, among others at Half Mountain and Paintsville, with complete success. In May it was engaged at Pond creek, Pike county.

In the organization of May 31, 1864, the 39th was in Gen. Hobson's division, and was with the troops with which that general opposed the coming into Kentucky of Morgan. With those troops it made the forced marches from the Sandy valley to Mt. Sterling, where it fought with Morgan June 9th, and also at Cynthiana, June 12th, and then participated in the pursuit. The 39th also accompanied Gen. Burbridge on the Saltville expedition in September, 1864, engaging in the fighting at that place.

In November Gen. Stoneman directed Gen. Burbridge to concentrate all his available force on the road between Crab Orchard and Cumberland Gap for the purpose of accompanying his expedition to Saltville, Va. November 21st part of the 39th were at Camp Nelson, but some of the men refused to leave their own section, knowing the exposed condition of their country and their families; they remained with other troops in the Sandy valley to continue to do their duty there. A portion of the regiment, however, accompanied Gen. Stoneman and shared in all the fighting and suffering of that severe but successful campaign.

The destruction of the salt and lead works by Gen. Stoneman being accomplished the return to Kentucky was through Pound Gap. After that the regiment wintered in the Sandy valley and was held in the service through the spring and summer of 1865, guarding and protecting and quieting the country. It was mustered out at Louisville, September 25, 1865, having had three years of continuous active service and participating in such a number of fights and skirmishes it would be difficult to enumerate them all. Capt. David V. Auxier died of wounds received on the Saltville expedition.

Fortieth Kentucky Mounted Infantry.

It may be seen by reference to the account of the 30th Ky. Infantry that in 1863 the governor of Kentucky was authorized to raise 20,000 troops for the defense of the state. The conditions rendering this necessary may also be seen in that account. Under this authority Col. Clinton J. True, who had been an officer in the 20th Ky. Infantry, recruited the 40th Ky. Infantry.

The men were from the eastern part of the state and the regiment was mustered into the service at Grayson, Carter county, Ky., in September, 1863, to serve for twelve months. It went at once into active duty, and in November was officially reported as one of the regiments on duty in Kentucky. In the organization of the Department of the Ohio, December 31, 1863, it was in Gen. Speed S. Fry's division of Northern Central Kentucky. During the winter it was employed in scouting through the eastern part of the state. In April Gen. Hobson reported Confederate Col. Ferguson coming into Kentucky by way of Pound Gap. At that time the 40th was with Col. True, who also had under him the 11th Mich. beyond West Liberty. This force co-operating with Col. Gallup met and routed Ferguson near Paintsville, April 14th. May 30, 1864, the 40th was in Hobson's division in the 2d Brigade commanded by Col. True, and the regiment was in charge of its lieutenant-colonel, Matthew Mullins. In June Gen. Morgan appeared on the Virginia side near Pound Gap. The Union troops in that section under Colonels Hanson, Gallup, John Mason Brown, and True were on the alert. But Morgan passed them and reached Mt. Sterling June 11th, near which place he overcame the forces then under Gen. Hobson, but on June 12th, the regiments under the officers just named, which had followed hard on Morgan's track, fought him at Cynthiana, routing him completely, and pursued him through the mountains out of the state. In this the 40th bore its part most handsomely, as the official reports show. Its effective strength on the field at that time was four hundred and fifty.

Col. Charles S. Hanson in his report expressed his most grateful thanks to the 40th Ky., along with the 39th, 37th and 52d, which were in his brigade and were with him as he says "in the fight at Cynthiana, for their bravery on the field, and efficient services rendered in the most trying hours of battle."

He especially compliments the conduct of Lieut. Col. Mullins and Maj. Bierbower of the 40th. After the rout of Morgan at Cynthiana the 40th Ky. with the brigade under Col. Hanson pursued the escaping enemy with remarkable rapidity, passing through Richmond, Irvine, Booneville, and up the south fork of Kentucky river, then crossing Pine mountain, reaching Cumberland river near Mt. Pleasant.

Col. Hanson says in his report:

> The march of four hundred and seventy miles from Cynthiana to Cumberland river and back to Lexington in eleven days, is perhaps the most rapid and trying known in this war, especially that from Irvine to the Cumberland, a distance of one hundred and twenty miles, in less than sixty hours, with stock, the most of which had already traveled nearly one thousand miles. This route passed over the roughest road known in the Kentucky mountains, many parts of it so rough that we had to move by single file leading the horses.

In September, 1864, the 40th went with the expedition under Gen. Burbridge to Saltville, Va. The command moved through Mt. Sterling to Prestonburg, Ky., and up Louisa Fork. The march to Saltville was attended with constant skirmishing, and as the movement became well understood by the enemy, troops were at the salt works in sufficient number to frustrate the object of the expedition.

The place was unsuccessfully attacked October 3d, and after a severe fight Burbridge withdrew and marched all night toward Kentucky. His force consisted almost wholly of Kentucky regiments; the 40th, 13th, 35th, 45th, 26th, 30th, 11th, 37th and 39th. Burbridge's loss in the battle at Saltville, as reported by Surg. James G. Hatchitt, U. S. A., was fifty-four killed and one hundred and ninety wounded. After the return from Saltville expedition the 40th remained on duty in Eastern Kentucky until December 30, 1864, when it was mustered out of service.

Col. Clinton J. True had been a captain in the 20th Infantry, and after his connection with the 40th he became colonel of the 53d Ky. Infantry.

Adjt. I. B. True had been a lieutenant in the 28th Ky. Infantry.

Forty-first Kentucky Infantry.

This regiment was called into service for thirty days at Covington, Ky., during Bragg's invasion of the state, and was disbanded at the expiration of its term of service.

Forty-second Kentucky Infantry.

This regiment was called into service for thirty days at Newport, Ky., during the invasion of the state by Bragg, and was disbanded at the expiration of its term of service.

Forty-third Kentucky Infantry.

This regiment was consolidated with the 32d Ky. Infantry.

Forty-fourth Kentucky Infantry.

The organization of this regiment was abandoned.

Forty-fifth Kentucky Mounted Infantry.

The 45th Regiment Ky. Mounted Infantry was at first designed as a battalion for local service on the Virginia front and in the eastern counties of Kentucky. The recruiting and organization of the command was intrusted to Maj. Lewis M. Clark, formerly lieutenant 16th Ky. Infantry, and captain 10th Ky. Cavalry. For some months in the summer of 1863 the recruits of four companies were employed as above indicated; but it was determined to increase the command to a regiment and muster it into the United States service.

Although the requisite number of recruits were rapidly collected, and the regiment put on active duty in October, 1863, and the organization effected at Ashland, Ky., the formal muster-in of two companies was unavoidably delayed until the beginning of the following January, when Col. John Mason Brown was assigned to the command, and Maj. L. M. Clark promoted to lieutenant-colonel.

During the early part of 1864 the regimental headquarters were at Mt. Sterling, Ky., from which point the 45th was continually employed in constant and arduous duty, covering the entire Virginia front from Cumberland Gap to Louisa, and keeping in check, by ceaseless activity, the rebel cavalry command concentrated in and about Abingdon, Va.

In March, 1864, being relieved by Gen. Sturgis' division of cavalry, the 45th Ky. moved to Flemingsburg; whence, in April, it was transferred to Irvine, Ky., and points south of that headquarters. In May it rendezvoused at Lexington, Ky., under the immediate command of Lieut. Col. Clark (Col. Brown commanding brigade), and was attached to Hobson's cavalry division, and marched to the Virginia line near Pound Gap. It led the pursuit after Morgan in June, 1864, and was the leading regiment of the assaulting column at the battle of Mt. Sterling, June 9, 1864. It participated in the battle of Cynthiana, June 12, 1864, in which Morgan's force was finally destroyed, having, up to that engagement, been continuously on duty for twenty-six days and nights, with no halt of as much as four hours.

During the months of July and August, 1864, a part of the regiment under Lieut. Col. Clark was detailed by Gen. Burbridge to pursue guerrillas and scattered Confederate troops in Owen, Trimble and the adjacent counties of Kentucky.

In October, 1864, the 45th Ky. formed part of Burbridge's command in the unsuccessful attack on Saltville, Va., and covered the retreat.

In November and December, 1864, it was in Stoneman's columns at the capture of Bristol, East Tennessee, Marion, Abingdon and Saltville, Va., and participated in all the engagements of that campaign.

Beside a great number of skirmishes of greater or less note, the 45th Ky. took part in the engagements of Mt. Sterling, Cynthiana, Marion, Bristol, Laurel Gap and Saltville.

From its constant duty in most inclement weather the regiment suffered even more seriously than from the bullets of the enemy, and a large proportion of the men were mustered out on account of injuries by frost-bites.

This regiment was mustered out by battalions at Cattletsburg, Ky.; Companies A, B, C, D, E, and F, on the 24th of December, 1864; Companies G, H, I, and K, on the 14th day of February, 1865.

NOTE.—In the summer of 1864, as in the summer of 1863, the presence of a large force in Kentucky was absolutely necessary. The value of railroads, especially the Louisville & Nashville railroad, as well as bridges and depots of supplies, was incalculable for the sustenance of the armies at the front, further south. Unprotected, they would have been entirely destroyed. It was natural that they should be protected by Kentucky troops under Kentucky officers. The raid of Morgan in 1863 was practically neutralized, as he was pushed so close by his pursuers he had no time to accomplish the destruction of anything of importance.

So, also, it proved in June, 1864, Morgan again entered the state by way of Pound Gap and made his way through the mountains.

Morgan states in his official report that his intention was to break the railroad from Cincinnati to Lexington, and then strike for the Louisville & Nashville railroad. Gens. Burbridge and Hobson were on the alert and moved in the direction of Pound Gap. Col. Brown, commanding a brigade, in which was his own regiment, the 45th, discovered that Morgan had entered the state, and was heading for Mt. Sterling. Brown pursued on the trail, while Hobson, taking what forces he could, hastened in the direction of Mt. Sterling. At Keller's Bridge Hobson met Morgan, and, in a lively fight, was overcome and captured with about three hundred men. Brown, still leading the advance of Burbridge's troops, by exceedingly rapid moving (it is said ninety miles in twenty-four hours), came up soon after the fight with Hobson; and two days after, viz., June 12th, Burbridge's force fell upon Morgan at Cynthiana, and completely defeated him, capturing many of his men, retaking all his prisoners and driving the wreck of his forces rapidly out of the state through the mountains.

Gen. Burbridge, in command in Kentucky at the time, received the thanks and congratulations of Secretary Stanton and Gen. Schofield.

But for this check, Morgan could have gone on and possibly have crippled the Louisville & Nashville railroad.

It is interesting to note the Kentucky regiments participating in this work so essential to the successful operation of the larger armies at the front, viz.: 13th Ky. Cavalry, 35th Ky. Mounted Infantry, 45th Ky. Mounted Infantry, 40th Ky. Mounted Infantry, 47th Ky. Mounted Infantry, 26th Ky. Mounted Infantry, 30th Ky. Mounted Infantry, 11th Ky. Cavalry, 37th Ky. Mounted Infantry, 39th Ky. Mounted Infantry.

The movements against the salt works in the southwestern part of Virginia deserve to be particularly noted. They were three in number. First, in June, 1864, Gen. Burbridge started an expedition which reached the borders of Virginia in the direction of Pound Gap, but just then Morgan entered Kentucky by way of that gap, and moved rapidly toward Lexington. Burbridge's troops were therefore hurriedly recalled, and the defeat of Morgan occurred at Cynthiana as stated. Then the second expedition to Saltville was undertaken in September, when Gen. Burbridge, having with him the Kentucky regiments mentioned, reached the place, but as the movement had become known, troops had been sent there in sufficient numbers to defeat Burbridge and compel his return. The third attempt, which was successful, was by Gen. Stoneman, who operated from East Tennessee. The Kentucky regiments were hastened out to join him, and he entered Virginia by way of the Tennessee valley, and succeeded in destroying the salt works at Saltville, and the lead works in the same section. That expedition was a very severe one on account of the cold and the scarcity of provisions and hard fighting.

The service of the several Kentucky regiments under Gen. Stoneman is mentioned in the account of each one respectively.

There was no more gallant and efficient officer than Col. John Mason Brown, of the 45th. Young, ardent, intelligent, and peculiarly acquainted with Kentucky, he was admirably adapted for the services he was appointed to perform. In the movements above mentioned, he commanded a brigade, while Lieut. Col. Clark commanded the regiment.

Gen. Bragg, in a report to the Confederate government, dated July 2d, says:

The accounts received so far do not indicate any satisfactory results of the movement into Kentucky by Gen. Morgan; should he ever return with his command, it will as usual be disorganized and unfit for service, until again armed, equipped and disciplined. The large number of prisoners we always lose by these raiding expeditions has been the source of great evil.

Gen. Burbridge says, in his official report:

When I arrived at Salyersville I received a courier from Col. John Mason Brown, informing me he was on the trail of Morgan's main force. I ordered Col. Brown to continue scouting in advance and pushed the command forward as rapidly and continuously as human endurance and due regard for the horses would admit, traveling without intermission except for absolutely necessary halts, night and day. When we were some ten miles from Mt. Sterling, Col. John Mason Brown reported to me in person that he had followed Morgan until he found he had taken Mt. Sterling and its small garrison on that morning with his cavalry and his infantry had arrived in the evening and all had gone into camp without a suspicion we were near. To this able officer great praise is due for the judgment and indefatigable energy displayed by him in the arduous march from Pound Gap, in which he had skirmished nearly every mile of the way and with a discretion that would have done honor to an older head had so continuously conducted the march of the advance that though he had picked up several stragglers from their ranks, the enemy had no suspicion of our proximity.

Forty-sixth Kentucky Infantry.

The organization of this regiment was abandoned.

Forty-seventh Kentucky Mounted Infantry.

The 47th Ky. Mounted Infantry was raised under the act of Congress authorizing the governor of Kentucky to organize not exceeding 20,000 troops for the defense of the state. The greater portion of the men were mustered into the service at Irvine, Ky., October 5, 1863. The others at Camp Nelson in December, 1863, and January, 1864. The officers instrumental in recruiting this regiment were Andrew W. Clark, Alfred C. Wilson and Thos. H. Barnes.

Like the other regiments organized under this 20,000 call, it was used for the defense of the state. There was a peculiar necessity for the men of the mountain counties of Kentucky to thus organize. Their section was exposed to inroads from Southwestern Virginia, and was poorly protected; the people were generally Unionists, and like Unionists of East Tennessee and West Virginia, they were compelled to act in self-defense. November 6, 1863, before the 47th was fully mustered into service, it was included in the military organization of Northern Central

Kentucky, under command of Gen. S. S. Fry, whose headquarters were at Camp Nelson. November 25th Gen. Boyle said he could send the 47th with other regiments to Big Hill. In the organization of the army of the Ohio, December 31, 1863, the 47th was under Col. Andrew H. Clark, in Gen. S. S. Fry's command. It so remained during that winter doing duty in scouting, by detachments through Eastern Kentucky. In the organization of the department of the Ohio, April 30, 1864, the 47th was under Maj. Barnes, brigaded with the 30th Ky., Col. Craddock; the 45th Ky., Col. Clark; the 49th, Capt. Golden, and 1st Wis. Battery. The brigade was commanded by Col John Mason Brown and was in Gen. Hobson's division. June, 1864, the 47th was at Paintsville with the forces there under Gen. Hobson. At that time Gen. John Morgan came into Kentucky with the avowed object of destroying the Kentucky Central Railroad, and then push for the Louisville and Nashville railroad. He came through Pound Gap in the extreme eastern part of the state, and before his purposes could be known he had passed the forces of Gen. Hobson in the section about Paintsville, and made his way toward Mt. Sterling. Upon receiving this information Gen. Hobson hastened in person by way of Cincinnati, hoping to reach Lexington in time to organize a force there by the time Morgan should reach that part of the state. Near Cynthiana, however, at a place called Kellar's Bridge, Gen. Hobson was captured with about three hundred men before he had time to accomplish his purpose. But the troops he had left in the eastern part of the state were hastening toward Lexington under Gen. Burbridge and Cols. John Mason Brown, Chas. S. Hanson and others; they were moving with the utmost expedition, and came upon Morgan shortly after Gen. Hobson's capture. Very severe fighting took place and on June 12th, at Cynthiana, Morgan was completely defeated and all that he had captured was retaken. Morgan was then pursued rapidly out of Kentucky, through the mountains and across Cumberland river. In all this service the 47th, under Col. Clark bore an active part.

Returning from the pursuit of Morgan the 47th was stationed at Camp Nelson in the command under Gen. S. S. Fry. At that time the father of Col. Clark, who was provost marshal of Owsley county, was basely murdered by a band of the enemy who so exasperated Col. Clark, he petitioned to be allowed to use his regiment to bring the murderers to punishment. The 47th continued during the remainder of its service on duty for the protection of the state. In September, 1864, it was on the line of the Kentucky Central railroad. In the same fall it was for a time at Camp Nelson, being with the 49th Ky. in the brigade commanded by Col. Thos. D. Sedgewick.

December 26, 1864, Companies A, B, C, D, E, F, G, and H were mustered out of service at Lexington. Companies I and K were mustered out April 12, 1865. The veterans were transferred to Battery E, and to the 4th Ky. Vet. Infantry.

The service of the 47th was continuous during the whole of its career, in protecting the state of Kentucky against the enemy.

Forty-eighth Kentucky Mounted Infantry.

(FROM THE ADJUTANT-GENERAL'S REPORT.)

The 48th Regiment Ky. Volunteers was enlisted principally from the counties of Trigg, Lyon, Livingston, Crittenden, Union, Christian, Caldwell, Muhlenberg, Breckinridge and Grayson, and was organized and mustered into service at Princeton, Ky., by Charles H. Fletcher, Captain 13th United States Infantry, on the 26th day of October, 1863, for the period of one year, with Hartwell T. Burge of Louisville as colonel.

This regiment was raised for especial service in Kentucky, to serve as a mounted force to aid in preventing raids and to clear the state of guerrillas.

Immediately upon muster it was assigned to 1st Brigade, 2d Division, department of Kentucky, and remained on duty at Princeton until the 1st of December, 1863, when it was ordered and marched to Russellville, Ky. Here it was ordered to detail on December 5th, viz: Companies A, D, I and K to Bowling Green, with Col. Burge as post commandant, companies B, F, G and H remaining at Russellville, with Lieut. Col. Hester as post commandant.

The regiment remained on duty at these stations until April 6, 1864, when, by direction of Brevet-Major Gen. Burbridge, it was removed, with exception of one company, and distributed along the line of the Louisville and Nashville railroad, garrisoning that line from Cave City to Louisville, headquarters at Munfordville, with Col. Burge as post commandant and Lieut. Col. Hester in command of regiment and supervision of the railway line guarded by his force. The several companies were garrisoned with headquarters as follows, viz: Company A, Elizabethtown; Companies B, F and H, Munfordville; Companies C and K, Fort Boyle, at Colesburg; Company D, Cave City; Company E, Fort at Shepherdsville; Company I, Louisville, and Company G, at Smithland, Ky., with Capt. Bush as post commandant. The details were very efficient in duty, and so well were their garrisons defended against many attacks made by the enemy, that the road as guarded, was never broken during the time they defended the same. On the 8th of July an order from Brig. Gen. Hugh Ewing, commanding 2d Division, department of Kentucky, relieved the regiment from garrison duty and authorized it to mount and equip for active service. Horses were pressed from disloyal citizens upon disloyal receipts, payable upon future proof of loyalty. About August 11th the regiment was thoroughly mounted and equipped. August 13th the regiment was ordered to concentrate and join Gen. Hobson, then moving from Lexington with a force against a rebel raid and recruiting rendezvous in Webtser and Union counties, commanded by Confederate Gen. Adam Johnson.

The regiment, in detachments, joined Gen. Hobson's column at Calhoun, Ky., about the 19th of August, and participated in the movements and actions of that command until August 24th, when at Canton, Ky., on the Cumberland river, the retreating rebel command was overtaken and dispersed, many of them being killed or captured. Gen. Johnson was wounded and captured near Wallonia, the day previous, August 23d. The regiment marched to Cadiz., Ky., where it received orders to proceed to Princeton, Ky., with instructions to regimental commander to make such disposition of the force as would be necessary to protect that section of the state. Detachments were placed in the counties bordering on the Cumberland river and in the interior region, and kept scouting and capturing guerrillas until ordered to Bowling Green to be mustered out by reason of expiration of term of service. One hundred and twenty-five guerrillas were captured during the stay of the regiment at Princeton.

During the service of this regiment, an opportunity was never had to call out its merit in one of the great battles of the rebellion, but its patriotism will compare favorably with other regiments from Kentucky, that held a place on Sherman's front; its duties and services were equally as honorable, when considered that it protected the lines of communication and aided in forwarding supplies to the armies in the front. Certain detachments of the regiment acquitted themselves in numerous engagements creditably, and deserve especial notice to secure justice and reward their bravery.

On the 7th of August, 1864, Capt. Hiett, with thirty-five men detailed from Companies B and C, were attacked at Salem, Ky., by three hundred Confederates and guerrillas. Capt. Hiett, with thirteen men, in the open street, with one volley from their guns and the bayonet, resisted the first charge of the enemy, after which he secured quarters in an old courthouse, and fought the enemy for six hours, compelling them to retreat, leaving eight killed. Loss of Capt. Hiett, two killed and three, with himself, wounded. The enemy carried off most of their dead and all of their wounded. Major Chennoworth was their commanding officer.

August 31, 1864, Col. Burge, with a scout of twenty men, came upon a camp of sixty guerrillas in Union county and engaged them, capturing the camp with a large amount of stores, killing one and capturing seven prisoners without loss. November 6, 1864, Capt. Jarrett, with forty-one men, detached from Companies F and K, was attacked by a force of five hundred and eighty men under Gen. Lyon. He defended that post with hard fighting for five hours when the enemy withdrew, taking away their killed and wounded. Capt. Jarrett's loss was one killed and two wounded. On November 18th this same force attacked Capt. Hiett with thirty-seven men at Eddyville, Ky. They were pursued by Lieut. Col. Hester and one hundred and eighty men from Princeton, and were overtaken in camp near Providence the night of the 21st of November; a skirmish ensued, resulting in the capture of the camp, some stores and prisoners. The raiders were pursued and driven from the state. Capt. Bush with one company at Smithland, was attacked several times during July, August and September by superior numbers of the enemy but always defended that post, and saved the large depository of army stores and supplies there. There are special instances wherein officers and men in small detachments met the enemy in greatly superior numbers beating them in close action, displaying great courage and bravery and they well deserve mention among like instances of bravery in the military history of our country's defenders.

On the 1st of December, 1864, by direction of Brig. Gen. Hugh Ewing, the regiment was marched to Bowling Green, Ky., for muster-out, its term of service having expired on the 26th day of October, 1864; but, owing to the active campaign of the Confederates under Hood against Nashville, Tenn., the regiment was kept under marching orders until the 19th of December, when it was mustered out by C. A. Wainwright, Captain 13th U. S. Infantry. The veterans were transferred to the 3d Kentucky Cavalry and 26th Kentucky Infantry.

Col. Hartwell T. Burge had been the chaplain of the 3d Ky. Cavalry. Lieut. Col. William W. Hester had also been an officer in the 3d Ky. Cavalry.

December 31, 1863, the 48th was on duty in the southwestern district of Kentucky in Col. Cicero Maxwell's brigade.

January 21, 1864, the regiment was at Russellville.

In March it was at Bowling Green.

Forty-ninth Kentucky Infantry.

The 49th Ky. Infantry was organized at Camp Nelson, Ky., in June, 1863, by Col. John G. Eve. The regiment was originally intended for cavalry service, and during part of its term served as mounted infantry. All the companies were mustered into service September 19th, except two, one of which was mustered October 7th, the other November 3d.

October 28, 1863, the regiment left Camp Nelson for Somerset. From thence it operated by detachments for various kinds of duty. Two companies were sent to Camp Burnside, one to Waynesboro. On the 3d and 4th days of January, 1864, the regiment went to Camp Burnside, where it remained during the spring. In the organization of the department of the Ohio, April 30, 1864, the 49th was in the 4th Brigade, under Col. John Mason Brown, together with the 30th Ky., 45th Ky., 47th Ky., and a Wisconsin battery.

In August it was sent to Lexington, Ky., and from thence to Louisville, for the purpose of operating in Western Kentucky, against Adam Johnson, but was sent back to Lexington. August 31st it was at Camp Nelson in the division there on duty under Gen. S. S. Fry.

October 1, 1864, the regiment was sent to Tennessee, and was stationed along the railroad near Murfreesboro, and between Wartrace and Mill creek, acting under the orders of Gen. Lovell H. Rousseau. The whole of the month of October was spent on this duty. In November, 1864, it returned to Lexington, where it was on duty under Gen. S. W. Price and Gen. McLean. During the whole existence of this regiment a large force was required in Kentucky to protect railroad and military property, and the country generally, and the 49th was used for this purpose. The regiment was mustered out of service December 26, 1864, by reason of expiration of term. The veterans, which re-enlisted under Capt. J. M. Cook, were transferred to the 7th Ky. Veteran Cavalry, constituting Company I of that organization. Those re-enlisted by Capt. Francis Catron were transferred to the 1st Ky. Cavalry.

Fiftieth Kentucky Infantry.

The recruits for this regiment were transferred to the 49th Ky. Volunteer Infantry, and formed Company K of that regiment.

Fifty-first Kentucky Infantry.

The recruits for this regiment were transferred to and constituted Company H of the 37th Ky. Volunteer Infantry.

Fifty-second Kentucky Infantry.

The act of Congress authorizing the governor of Kentucky to raise and organize a volunteer force for the defense of Kentucky, not exceeding 20,000, is mentioned in the account of the 30th Ky. Mounted Infantry. The condition of Kentucky, which made this necessary, is also mentioned. The service of the regiments raised under that call shows to what extent they were needed. The situation of Kentucky was such as to make it not only essential to be held by the Federal forces, but also a field for invasion by the other side. Morgan and Forrest and Wheeler, not to speak of lesser Confederate cavalry leaders, directed their efforts to the raiding of Kentucky. There were also local bands known as guerrillas, which gave great trouble. They sought to injure all United States property and railroads and bridges used by the Federal forces, and in every way impair the efficiency of those forces.

To protect the state there were promptly organized, under the act of Congress mentioned, eleven full regiments, and they all rendered most important and valuable service. One of these regiments was the 52d Mounted Infantry. The following is taken from the adjutant-general's report:

The 52d Ky. Mounted Infantry was organized under the authority of an act of congress, dated February 7, 1863, authorizing the governor to raise twenty thousand troops for the better defense of Kentucky. Companies A, B, C, and E, were mustered in at Scottsville, Ky., October 16, 1863, and Company D on the 17th of October. Company F was mustered in November 12, 1863, and Company G, December 21, 1863, at Franklin, Ky. Companies H, I and K, were mustered in March 3, 1864, at Franklin, Ky.

This regiment was raised for twelve months' service, and under provisions of the act were to be employed in repelling invasions, suppressing insurrection, and guarding and protecting the public property. For the purpose of enabling it to cope more readily with the guerrillas that infested the state it was mounted, and stationed in the lower and central portion of the state, and rendered efficient aid to the government in protecting its line of communication with the army at the front. Being raised in a section of the country where the life of a Union man was constantly in jeopardy from the heartless guerrillas, many of the members of this organization had private grievances to correct that may have led them to commit excesses upon those recreant Kentucklans who fostered the guerrillas and pointed out the homes of Unionists for destruction. Still their services were efficient and appreciated by the government they had sworn to defend.

In the many fights and skirmishes in which it engaged, the bearing of both officers and men sustained the gallant record so bravely won by all Kentucky troops during the rebellion.

The following additional is obtained from the official reports:

In the spring of 1864, Gen. Sherman was gathering his army at Chattanooga for the Atlanta compaign. The work of the Confederate cavalry was very active in his rear upon his line of supplies. If the railroad from Louisville to Nashville and thence to Chattanooga could be crippled it would materially injure Sherman. So also if a great number of troops could be kept employed along this line, all so occupied would be prevented from uniting with Sherman at the front. It is natural, therefore, to find that in March, 1864, Forrest was in Kentucky moving from the west. On that account March 23d, the 52nd was ordered by Gen. Hobson, in whose division it then was, to move from Scottsville to Bowling Green, to concentrate a force there. The damage being averted in that section it was ordered to the eastern part of the state to assist in opposing the entrance of Morgan. April 19th it proceeded to Irvine, Ky.; April 30th, in the organization of the Department of the Ohio, the 52nd was in Col. Chas. S. Hansom's brigade, in Hobson's division. June 6th Col. Grider was sent with part of the 52d and part of the 37th to Pound Gap to obstruct the passes. Another portion of the regiment fought Morgan at Mt. Sterling, June 10th and at Cynthiana, June 12th, with other troops to the entire discomfiture of Morgan's command. Immediately afterward, the Federal forces, so engaged, including the 52d, pursued the enemy as far as the Cumberland river, moving a distance of four hundred and seventy miles in eleven days. In the fighting at Mt. Sterling Col. Hansom compliments especially Maj. Tyler of the 52d; at this place Capt. Lewis Buckner was wounded and taken prisoner, but made his escape and continued with his regiment

In July the 52d had returned from the eastern part of Kentucky and was in the western part July 18th. Lieut. Col. S. F. Johnson reports from Hopkinsville that he had been through Webster and Union counties, and had fought with Sypert's band of three hundred at Geiger's lake and scattered it, killing and wounding over thirty.

In August the regiment was ordered to Uniontown to operate against Adam Johnson, who was in that part of the state. August 21st a portion of the 52d was in Hopkinsville, and, in a successful fight there with two hundred men under Col. Woodward, that officer was killed. August 26th the 52d was ordered to Lexington. August 27th the following dispatch was sent from Bowling Green, which illustrates the condition of Kentucky in the summer of 1864.

Woodward's and (Adam) Johnson's men are scattered over Southern Kentucky and the 52d Ky. in pursuit. Lieut. Col. (Sam) Johnson is re-enlisting his regiment and recruiting rapidly. If the regiment is withdrawn Southern Kentucky is ruined and the re-enlistment is defeated. We will have twelve companies soon if allowed to remain.

B. H. Bristow.

August 30th the 52d was ordered to Bowling Green. It was then in Col. Cicero Maxwell's brigade. It proceeded into Tennessee through Nashville. October 1st it was at Tullahoma, in the command of Gen. Rousseau, operating against Forrest and Wheeler. In October it proceeded to Athens and Huntsville, Ala. It returned and served with the cavalry of Gen. Thomas about Nashville. December 5th it was again at Bowling Green and went into Western Kentucky to aid in resisting the invasion of the Confederates under Gen. Lyon.

After the destruction of Gen. Hood's army at Nashville, in December, 1864, the 52d was not so actively engaged and was mustered out of service in January and March, 1865, having made a splendid record as a useful and gallant regiment.

Fifty-thira Kentucky Mounted Infantry.

This regiment was organized in the fall of 1864, at Paris, Ky. The men belonged to that section of the state. Clinton J. True was the colonel and W. C. Johnson, lieutenant-colonel. In 1861 Col. True was a captain in the 20th Ky. Infantry. In June, 1863, he left the 20th to become colonel of the 40th Ky. Infantry, being organized at that time for twelve months' service. Then, in the summer of 1864, upon the expiration of the term of the 40th, Col. True entered upon the work of raising another regiment for the service. In the official report of Col. Simpson, chief engineer in charge of the defensive structures at various points in Kentucky, of date October 13, 1864, he says: "Speaking of the defenses along the line of the Kentucky Central railroad, he is pleased to learn that the 53d Ky. Infantry is to take the places of some other troops; that from his knowledge of the regiment he was sure it would discharge the duties required of it."

The adjutant-general's report says of the 53d:

> Being mounted it was constantly employed in scouting the counties in the central part of the state and along the Kentucky Central railroad. In the second expedition to Saltville, it suffered much from cold and long, fatiguing marches. It participated in many skirmishes and battles of Clinch river, Marion, and Saltville, Va., in all of which it performed its duty to the entire satisfaction of the commanding generals.

In the official reports the 53d is mentioned as guarding the railroad between Lexington and Cincinnati in November, 1864. It was at Lexington November 23d. On the 24th it was ordered to hurry forward to Crab Orchard to join the forces collecting then for the second Saltville expedition. On the 25th it was at Camp Nelson.

Reaching Crab Orchard, it became part of the force which was led by Gen. Burbridge through Cumberland Gap into East Tennessee, when, joining with Gen. Stoneman, the movement into Virginia was made, which resulted in the destruction of the salt works and lead works, at and near Saltville.

The importance of these works was shown by the desperate efforts the Confederates made to save them.

The object of the expedition being attained, the troops returned to Kentucky. During the winter, spring and summer of 1865 the 53d was kept on duty by detachments at various points.

Of this regiment, as of several others raised in Kentucky at that stage of the war, it may be stated that while it did not participate in the movements of the great armies, yet when it was organized and mustered into service, the men placed themselves at the call of their country; they offered themselves for whatever duty was assigned, and nobly and dutifully served in the places to which they were sent. In the December movements through the mountains of Kentucky and Virginia, as stated, the men suffered greatly from cold and hunger and fatigue.

The 53d was mustered out of service at Louisville September 15, 1865.

Fifty-fourth Kentucky Mounted Infantry.

In the accounts of the 5th Ky. Infantry, or Louisville Legion, as it was called, it is stated that when the volunteers were in camp Jo Holt, opposite Louisville, H. M. Buckley had come to that camp from Henry county, Ky., with a company of men, and, being known to Lovell H. Rousseau as a stalwart, determined man, was at once selected as lieutenant-colonel of the 5th Ky. Infantry.

When Rousseau was made a general, Buckley became colonel of the 5th and commanded it for a time. In the Buell and Bragg campaign, and in the battle of Murfreesboro, Col. Buckley commanded a brigade in Sill's division. In June, 1863, he was compelled to resign his commission, but as soon as he could do so, he sought opportunity for further service. In the summer of 1864 there was an imperative need for troops in Kentucky. The state was overrun with predatory bands, which made war not only upon all government property, but also upon all persons who adhered to the Union. A large force was necessary to protect the state not only from these bands, but also from larger movements of the enemy. Under these circumstances special authority was granted from the War Department to Col Buckley for raising a regiment to aid in protecting Kentucky. His well-known character enabled him to recruit his regiment in a short time, and it was mustered into service at New Castle, Henry county, Ky., September, 1864, as the 54th Ky. Mounted Infantry. The men were all from that immediate section of the state. In the account of the regiment in the adjutant-general's report, it is said: "The difficulties attending the recruiting and organization of this regiment were great, owing to the frequent raids by guerrillas and the constant presence of predatory bands in the vicinity of its camp." The report further says: "The regiment was mounted and performed duty in various portions of Kentucky, and by the energy displayed by its officers, soon expelled the guerrillas from the section of the country where it was stationed."

In November and December, 1864, various Kentucky regiments were brought together to take part in the second expedition to Saltville, Va. The 54th moved to Crab Orchard, being then in command of its Lieut. Col., John G. Rogers, while Col. Buckley commanded the brigade to which it was attached. The movement was from Crab Orchard through Cumberland Gap. The expedition was under the command of Gen. Stoneman. After passing through the Gap, fighting began at Clinch mountain and continued more or less until the object of the expedition was accomplished. Passing through Bean's Station the troops moved up the Tennessee valley by way of Greenville and into Virginia. From Marion Va., Col. Buckley's command was sent to destroy the lead works, which, together with the destruction of the salt works, was the object in view. Col. Buckley describes this as very severe duty. His men rode all night and all the next day, fired the lead works, and seeing them destroyed, immediately returned to Marion, riding all night and fighting all the way. A severe battle occurred at Marion, but the expedition was entirely successful, the salt works and lead works being destroyed. It being impossible to carry supplies, and there being none in the country, the men and animals were greatly distressed for want of provisions. Col. Buckley stated to the writer that he saw men eating corn, biting it from the cob like a horse.

From Marion the expedition returned to Kentucky through Pound Gap. The weather was extremely cold, and the suffering of the men was very great. Passing through Mt. Sterling, Col. Buckley's command moved on to Lexington. The 54th remained on duty in that section of the state during the remainder of the winter, going from place to place by detachments, as occasion required.

It was continued in service during the spring and summer of 1865, and was mustered out of service September 1, 1865. The regiment made a most excellent record for discipline and prompt execution of every duty it was called upon to perform.

Fifty-fifth Kentucky Mounted Infantry.

The following is the mention of this regiment contained in the adjutant-general's report:

"The 55th Ky. Infantry was raised under special authority from the War Department, and was organized at Covington, Ky., in November, 1864. It was mounted and performed duty in the counties bordering on the Kentucky Central railroad, until ordered on the Saltville expedition under Gen. Burbridge. On this expedition it performed good and efficient service, and was favorably mentioned by the commanding general, among other troops of his division, for gallant bearing in the face of the enemy. After the return from Virginia the regiment was, by detail, posted in various counties of the state to protect the citizens from depredations of guerrillas, upon which duty it remained until mustered out at Louisville, Ky., on the 19th day of September, 1865."

The regiment was recruited by Col. Weden O'Neal in the months of September, October and November, 1864, at a time when there was a great demand for troops in Kentucky to protect the state from guerrillas. It served in Gen. McLean's division, who made his headquarters at Lexington.

November 17, 1864, the 55th, having reported at Lexington, was ordered by Gen. McLean to proceed to Covington and report for duty at that place. It was then directed to join the forces which were hastily gathered in Kentucky to proceed, under command of Gen. Stoneman, on the expedition in Southwestern Virginia. These troops moved through the mountains of Kentucky into East Tennessee, and in December, 1864, went up the Tennessee valley to Bristol, Va. From that point they proceeded to the salt works, which they destroyed. This expedition was in very severe weather, and the suffering of the troops was great.

Gen. Stoneman, in his report, says:

> The conduct of his troops was all that could have been expected of veterans. Neither danger, long marches, sleepless nights, hunger nor hardships brought forth a complaint, and the utmost harmony and good feeling prevailed throughout.

During the remainder of the winter the 55th was employed in Kentucky, and when the spring opened its duties became very active.

April 18, 1865, Gen. Hobson, at Lexington, reports as follows:

> I have succeeded in mounting and equipping five hundred and thirty-five men of the 55th Ky. Mounted Infantry. Orders have been forwarded the commanding officer, directing him to scout all the counties west of the Central Kentucky railroad to the Kentucky river, and the counties of Campbell, Bracken, Mason, Fleming, Nicholas, Harrison and Pendleton, east of the Kentucky Central railroad. This arrangement and disposition of my command will completely break up guerrilla bands in the counties and sections of country named.

Gen. Hobson, in his order to Col. O'Neal, directed him to "respect private property of citizens, and in every instance give proper receipts for forage. . . . It is expected that your command will behave as true soldiers, patriots and gentlemen. I have full confidence in your regiment, and believe and hope that my wishes and instructions will be fully complied with."

The 55th continued in the performance of this service during the remainder of its term, until it was mustered out in September, 1865. It was a full regiment, numbering eight hundred and seventy-five men, and performed it duty faithfully and well.

After the war Col. O'Neal held the office of United States marshal for Kentucky, in 1876 and 1877.

The surgeon of this regiment was Dr. E. R. Palmer, the well-known and prominent physician of Louisville, after the war.

BATTERIES.

First Kentucky Independent, or Simmond's, Battery.

In the roll of the 1st Ky. Volunteer Infantry as given in the adjutant-general's report, under the head of Company E, we read:

"This company was detached early in 1861, and afterward designated as the 1st Ky. Independent Battery."

We also read in the adjutant-general's report:

"This battery was organized as Company E, of the 1st Ky. Infantry, at Camp Clay, Ohio, in 1861, and detached as artillery October 31, 1861, by the Secretary of War at the instance of Gen. Rosecrans then commanding in Western Virginia. It was mustered into the United States service (as Company E, in the 1st Ky. Infantry), on the 3d day of June, 1861, by Maj. S. Burbank, 1st U. S. Infantry. It was assigned to the Department of West Virginia, and participated in all the engagements in that department. It was originally commanded by Capt. Seth J. Simmonds until March, 1864, when Capt. Daniel W. Glassie assumed command and under him it veteranized at Charleston, W. Va."

In an official report made by Gen. J. D. Cox, from Charleston, W. Va., April 5, 1862, he says: "Simmond's battery consists of three 10-pounder Parrotts, two bronze rifled James' guns, 10-pounders, one smooth iron 6-pounder (captured from Wise), and has besides under its care two 20-pounder Parrotts and one smooth bronze 6-pounder. Capt. Simmonds has not men enough to man more than six pieces. His company was an infantry company in the 1st Ky. Infantry and was transferred to the artillery by consent of the Secretary of War. They did good service through all of the last campaign and are thoroughly reliable."

This battery served with great credit in all the campaigns in Western Virginia in the early part of the war, and later was engaged in some of the great battles of the Army of the Potomac.

The following mention of the points at which it was on the dates given, will show its great activity:

1861. November it was at Kanawha Falls.

1862. December, January, February, March and April at Gauley Bridge.

1862. May, June, July at Flat Top Mountain.

1862. August at Munson's Hill.

1862. September it was at South Mountain and Antietam, and received special and numerous mention in the reports of those battles.

1862. October at Suttonville, W. Va.

From November, 1862, to April, 1863, at Gauley Bridge; in May and June at Camp White, Va.; July and August at Gauley Bridge.

From September, 1863, to January, 1864, at Camp Toland, Va. February, March and April at Fayetteville, Va. In May at Burgers Hall. June at Camp Piatt. July at Harper's Ferry.

From August, 1864, to June, 1865, at Fort Fuller, Va., and other places in that section.

It participated in the following battles in which loss was sustained: Tyler's Mountain, Horse Shoe Bend, Cotton Mountain, Gauley Bridge, Wolf Creek, Cloyd Mountain, South Mountain, New River Bridge, Lynchburg, Salem, Va.; also Frederick City and Antietam, Md. The adjutant-general of Kentucky says, in his official report in which it is mentioned, that "it was distinguished for gallantry, discipline and soldierly conduct throughout its whole enlistment and the officers and men have received separate praise from the department commanders under whom they served."

It was mustered out at Louisville, Ky., July 10, 1865, having served with great activity throughout the entire period of the war.

Battery A.

This battery was sometimes called Stone's Battery and sometimes the First Ky. Battery. It was organized in July, 1861, at Camp Jo Holt, opposite Louisville. In the account of the Louisville Legion or 5th Ky. Infantry, it can be seen how Gen. Rousseau established this camp in July, 1861, and assembled there several thousand Kentuckians for enlistment in the Union service. From these men at Camp Jo Holt, Capt. David C. Stone, of Louisville, organized at that time a battery which went by his name popularly, but was designated as Battery A. When the Confederate troops came into Kentucky, September, 1861, Gen. Rousseau took his men from Camp Jo Holt through Louisville and down the Nashville railroad to Muldraugh's Hill. Capt. Stone's battery was with this force, and it was at Muldraugh's Hill that his men were mustered into the United States service, September 27, 1861. From Muldraugh's Hill it went southward to Nolin, Ky., and it was there or in that vicinity until in February, 1862. When the Confederates fell back from Kentucky on acount of the fall of Fort Donelson in February, Battery A was taken to Nashville, being attached to Gen. McCook's division of the army under Gen. Buell. From Nashville it moved with Buell's army to Pittsburg Landing. Gen. McCook says, in his report, it did not arrive in time to go into action. Passing over the field of Shiloh it went before Corinth, Miss., where it continued until that place was evacuated by Bragg's forces. It then accompanied Buell's army during the summer of 1862. In June it was at Florence, Ala.; in July at Battle Creek; in August at Pelham, Tenn. It moved with Buell's army to Kentucky, and engaged in the battle of Perryville. The part this battery took in that battle is noticed in all of the accounts that have been written. They all agree in giving great credit to its work. Gen. McCook says, in his report: "The posting of Starkweather's brigade and Stone's and Bush's batteries saved my left." Gen. Rousseau says: "A large body of the enemy's cavalry appearing one and a half miles to the front it was admirably shelled and dispersed in great disorder by Capt. Stone's 1st Ky. Artillery." He also again speaks of the "admirable work" of Stone's battery.

After Bragg left Kentucky, Battery A returned to Nashville, and on December 31, 1862, participated in the battle of Murfreesboro, or Stone's river, being as effective there as at Perryville, though suffering more, not only in men but also in the loss of horses. After the battle it remained at Murfreesboro and in that part of Tennessee, going from place to place as ordered for about a year. Up to February, 1863, it was commanded by Capt. Stone; after that by Capt. Thomasson. During the year 1863 the battery was taken to numerous points on marches and reconnoissances, among them was one in September to Stevenson, Ala.

Being selected for the defenses of Nashville and middle Tennessee and the railroads in that section, it was kept there during the winter, spring and summer of 1864. In January, 1864, it went into the veteran organization. In October, 1864, it was at Tantalon Station, Tenn., and in November at Pulaski. At that place it was attached to the 4th Army Corps, under Gen. Stanley, which had been sent to proceed with other troops under Gen. Schofield to resist Hood's movement northward. From Pulaski it fell back with the Federal forces under Schofield through Columbia and Spring Hill to Franklin, where it took a leading part in that battle, November 30, 1864. The position it occupied was the main point of attack, being immediately to the left of the Columbia pike, between that pike and the gin house. During the battle, which lasted only about one hour, it fired one hundred and nine rounds. Its fire was very destructive and materially aided in the successful defense of the position.

Capt. Thomasson makes a very interesting statement in his report, which shows that the men who momentarily gave back from the line in the great charge at Franklin, immediately rallied and aided in restoring the break. He says:

"Our retreating troops (Lane and Conrad's brigades) came over the breastworks in considerable disorder, closely pressed by the enemy and a portion of the troops supporting the battery giving way, the cannoneers were driven from their posts. In a short time, however, a brigade in reserve charged forward and drove back the enemy and retook the battery. The cannoneers were then collected, the limbers of the caissons brought up and a steady fire of canister and shell kept up for about two hours."

When the battle was over the battery moved with Schofield's troops to Nashville, and on the 15th and 16th of December fought in the battle of Nashville. Capt. Thomasson says in his report:

"The following is the amount of ammunition expended: Hotchkiss solid shot, 5; percussion shell, 167; time shell, 117; case shot, 272; total, 561."

December 17th the battery moved to Franklin; 18th to Spring Hill; 19th to Rutherford creek; 21st to Columbia; 23d moved toward Pulaski and engaged with the retiring enemy, firing forty rounds.

It then followed Hood's broken army southward as far as Huntsville, Ala., where it remained until February. It then went into East Tennessee with a force in March and returned to Nashville, where it was in April and May, 1865. It was then taken to New Orleans in June and to Victoria, Texas, where it was in October. From that point it returned to Louisville where it was mustered out November 5, 1865.

Battery A had long service, much of which was exceedingly active. It performed every duty to which it was called with a disciplined bravery which elicited the commendation of all the commanders under whom it served.

Battery B.

Company D, of the 3d Ky. Infantry, when that regiment was first recruited by Col. Bramlette at Camp Dick Robinson, was used for the artillery service, and came to be known as Battery B, or Hewitt's battery. The men were recruited by Capt. Hewitt for infantry service, but as an artillery company was needed, it was drilled for that service, and was mustered as such by Gen. Thomas October 8, 1861. At that early period of the war it was under Gen. Thomas, and was used in the parts of the state about Somerset, Columbia and toward Cumberland river.

November 7th Gen. Thomas says, in a report, that the enemy had returned to Monticello, he supposes, because he had withdrawn from thence Capt. Hewitt's battery, and that he had directed it to return.

In December it was at Campbellsville; in January, 1862, at Birch Grove; in February it was taken to Louisville, and immediately sent to Nashville, where it was continuously from March to November, 1862, being used there for the defense of that place and the surrounding country. In April it was at Murfreesboro, and in June it accompanied a cavalry expedition across the mountains to the front of Chattanooga.

July 13th, while at Murfreesboro, the place was attacked by Forrest, and a part of the Federal force there, under Gen. T. T. Crittenden, was captured. At this time Battery B lost two guns.

When Buell's army marched to Kentucky, Battery B was retained in Tennessee, it being Gen. Buell's policy to keep there a considerable force for the protection of Nashville.

When Buell was superseded by Rosecrans, Battery B went with the Federal army from Nashville to Murfreesboro, and participated in that battle, December 31, 1862. In that battle it was in Negley's division, and was posted to the right of Crittenden's corps and left of McCook's corps. Its losses were severe, and the horses were greatly injured. The battery fired four hundred and ninety-three rounds on December 31st. After the battle the battery remained at Murfreesboro and vicinity, until June, 1863, when it engaged in an expedition, under Gen. Negley, from Murfreesboro through Hoover's Gap, Manchester, Hillsboro, Bobo's Crossroads to Elk river, engaging the enemy frequently on the way, once severely at University. In July it was still in Negley's command at Decherd Station, and from August, 1863, to February, 1864, it was stationed at Elk river bridge, being used from that point on various moves. In March it was again at Decherd Station. From April to October, 1864, it was used to guard the railroad over which supplies went from Nashville to Sherman's army in Georgia. Its post was Tullahoma, and much of the time it was in charge of Lieut. G. W. Nell, though sometimes under Lieut. Ellsworth.

This battery did not enter the veteran organization as a whole, but some of its members did so, and they were transferred to Battery A. The battery, as an organization, however, was ordered to Louisville in November, 1864, and on November 16th was mustered out of service.

The career of this battery was most useful and honorable, beginning with Gen. Thomas, when he was contending with Zollicoffer's forces in Eastern Kentucky, it faithfully obeyed every order and bravely discharged every duty it was called upon to perform for full three years of active field service.

Battery C.

Battery C was organized in August, 1863, by Capt. John W. Neville. It was intended for one year's service, but in February, 1864, it entered the veteran organization and continued in service until the end of the war. It may be seen, by reference to the history of several of the infantry and cavalry organizations, that a strong force was necessary in Kentucky to guard the state from incursions which would have destroyed its railroads and other property. Battery C was used in Kentucky in connection with these forces.

On the 21st of May, 1863, John W. Neville, of Louisville, was commissioned to raise a six-gun battery—one hundred and fifty-six men. He located his camp at Lebanon. He drew one gun from the state for drill purposes, and by July 1st had seventy men. July 3d Lebanon was attacked by Gen. Morgan, and the troops there under Col. Charles S. Hanson were compelled to surrender. Capt. Neville's men were marched hurriedly with Morgan's force, but they were left without having been paroled. Capt. Neville then moved his camp to Louisville, completed his organization and was mustered into service September 10, 1863. He was at once ordered to report to Gen. Hobson, in the southeastern part of Kentucky.

March 1, 1864, he reported to Gen. Sturgis, at Paris, Ky., and made the move with Gen. Stoneman on his raid to Georgia, but after starting was ordered to return and report to Gen. Burbridge at Lexington, and was assigned to the 5th Division, 23d Army Corps, at Mt. Sterling. Early in May it moved to the mouth of Beaver on the Big Sandy. It was then with Col. Hanson's brigade. At this time Gen. Morgan came into Kentucky by way of Pound Gap, and Capt. Neville's battery moved in pursuit by way of Louisa. From there it accompanied the troops on the rapid march through Salyersville and Hazel Green, toward Mt. Sterling. June 9th it came up with Morgan's forces in the vicinity of Mt. Sterling, and became severely engaged several hours. All the battery horses except one were killed, and one gun captured, which was a little afterward recaptured. Equipping with other horses the battery, with the various troops that had come up, it pursued Morgan through Lexington to Cynthiana, where another severe fight occurred. The battery opened the battle, firing with great effect upon the enemy at the bridge. In this engagement Lieut. Reynolds was in command of the battery, and was handsomely complimented by Col. Hanson. The result of the fighting was the complete overthrow of Morgan and his rapid expulsion from the state.

On the 14th of November, 1864, the men of the battery who did not re-enlist were mustered out, while the veterans and recruits continued with the 5th Division, and in Col. Hanson's brigade. With these troops it went on the expedition to Saltville, Va., enduring all the hardships and severe fighting incident thereto.

From that campaign it returned to the eastern part of Kentucky, where it was held on duty until in the early part of 1865, when it was ordered to Arkansas. It remained there on duty during the spring of 1865, and from thence returned to Louisville, and was mustered out of service July 26, 1865.

Battery E.

This battery was organized at Louisville, Ky., in September, 1863, under Capt. John J. Hawes, and was mustered into the United States service for one year at Camp Nelson, Ky., on the 6th day of October, 1863, by Capt. R. B. Hull, United States mustering officer. It performed garrison duty at Camp Nelson and Camp Burnside for several months, being in the command of Gen. T. T. Garrard commanding the District of Somerset, and in February, 1864, re-enlisted for three years. It was at Lexington, Ky., in June, 1864, when the city was attacked by John Morgan's forces, and by a few well directed shots, succeeded in driving them from the city. It remained at Lexington, Ky., until November, 1864, being in Gen. McLean's division and the brigade commanded by Col. S. W. Price, when it received orders to march for East Tennessee, and join Gen. Stoneman in his expedition against Saltville, Va. This battery participated in the battle of Marion, Va., on the 18th of December, 1864, and on the 21st of December, in the capture of Saltville. After the capture of Saltville, all the guns of the battery were destroyed and the men mounted and returned to Lexington, Ky., by way of Pound Gap and Mt. Sterling. This expedition was one of great severity, many of the men being badly frost-bitten, but enduring the cold and fatigues with marked patience and courage. From Lexington it marched to Camp Nelson, where it remained until ordered to Louisville, Ky., for muster-out August 1, 1865.

ENGINEERS.

Patterson's Company of Mechanics and Engineers.

Patterson's company of mechanics and engineers was organized at Somerset, Ky., under Capt. W. F. Patterson, and mustered into the United States service by Lieut. Chas. S. Medary, United States mustering officer.

This company had a most extraordinary career. As soon as enlisted it was employed in the construction of defenses for Camp Hoskins, Ky., then under command of Col. Hoskins, up to the 2d of December, 1861, when Brig. Gen. Shoepff assumed command, and continued the work of defense in the vicinity of Somerset, Ky., until the battle of Mill Springs, on the 19th of January, 1862. On the 16th of January this company, together with seven companies from the command, were employed in the repair of the road from Somerset to Stanford, Ky. On the 8th of February, the seven companies were relieved and the work continued by this company, under orders of Gen. Thomas. On the 12th of April, it was ordered to report to headquarters Seventh Division, Army of Ohio, Cumberland Ford, Ky., by Gen. Geo. W. Morgan, where it arrived on the 20th, repairing roads on the way. From the 25th of April to May 1st, engaged with large detailed force, aided in the repair of the road for supplies. From 1st of May this company constructed roads and bridges forty miles for a flank movement upon Cumberland Gap through Cumberland mountains, which was accomplished successfully on the 18th of June. From this date a new detail was added of two hundred and thirty men, and engaged in the construction of buildings, roads, etc., up to the 18th of September when all was destroyed by order of Gen. Morgan, together with nine siege guns. Marched with the advance of column, clearing blockades, building bridges, etc., to Greenupsburg, Ky., two hundred miles, arriving on the 3d of October. Continued with the column to Charleston, Va. Embarked on transports 1st of November, 1862, for Memphis, arriving about December 1st. On the 20th of December, embarked on transports for Yazoo river, arriving and debarking at Chickasaw Bayou on the 26th of December. A battle occurred on the 27th. From the 26th to the 1st of January, 1863, this company was constantly engaged, day and night, in preparing earth-works, and on the 28th was greatly exposed in an effort to throw a pontoon bridge across Chickasaw Bayou, under a destructive fire from the enemy. Sergt. Welsh, in charge of the party, relinquished the effort only when the boats were so damaged as to be useless. On the 1st of January, 1863, embarked on transports for Arkansas Post, arriving on the 10th. After the battle and surrender, the demolition of the fort and siege guns was assigned to this company, with a large detail from the command. A note of compliment was received from the commanding general. Embarked for Young's Point on the 14th; arrived 22d of January, 1863. By Special Order No. 177, February 2, 1863, headquarters 13th Army Corps, two pioneer corps, one hundred and fifty men each, were ordered to report to Capt. Patterson for duty. From this date to 29th of March, built two miles of wooden road, half mile of levee, seven feet high, besides work done on the canal. On the 30th of March, marched to Richmond, La., with 69th Ind., the advance of the army, for the rear of Vicksburg. On April 1st built floating bridges 300 feet long across Bayou Roundaway (a rapid stream), inside of twenty-four hours. On the 25th prepared a casemate for a 12-pound howitzer on board a flat-boat, with which Gen. Osterhaus advanced upon Carthage, on the Mississippi, driving the enemy five miles down the river. From the 6th to 19th worked two saw-mills and built twenty flat boats. On the 19th under orders, reported to Gen. Hovey with a barge to build a bridge 780 feet long across Bayou Vedell, twelve miles below Carthage, which was completed in fourteen hours. Marched two miles, built a bridge across Negro Bayou, 250 feet long, same day. By means of the flat-boats one hundred and fifty tons of ammunition were transported to the Mississippi from Richmond, and they were then used by Capt. Jackson of Gen. Hovey's division, to bridge Mound Bayou, 630 feet broad, which was completed April 26th. This was forty-five miles from Milliken's Bend, then flooded with water. For greater certainty a squad of this company was left in charge until the army passed. No accident or delay occurred on this work. Leaving this point, it marched four miles to Perkins' plantation on the Mississippi. On the 28th of April, embarked on transports for Grand Gulf, debarking same day at Hard Times, two miles above Grand Gulf. On the 29th a fleet of seven gunboats fired upon the rebel works, retiring at 4 p. m. The rebels continuing their fire, the troops marched below, following the levee, and camped for the night. On the 30th crossed to east bank of Mississippi, and marched with Gen. Carr's division in the advance. On May 1st, the battle of Port Gibson was fought. On May 2d, was ordered in front of Gen. Logan's division, 17th Army Corps, by Col. Wilson, engineer on Gen. Grant's staff, to build a bridge across Bayou Pierre over 100 feet long, which was done in less than three hours. Reached Big Bayou Pierre, 12 p. m.; repaired burnt bridge 300 feet long with new floor. The troops crossed at daylight. Reached Raymond on the 11th. The pontoon train arrived, crossing our bridges from Milliken's Bend. On the 16th the battle of Champion Hills was fought, and on the 17th the battle of Big Black River. Constructed bridge across Big Black, 200 feet long—troops crossing at sunrise on the 18th.

Reached rear of Vicksburg on the evening of the 18th, was employed up to the 22d planting artillery. During the charge on the 22d, Lieut. Steiner, of the 60th Ind., led two squads of the pioneers to dig down the earth-works on either side of the railroad, vacated for the time by the enemy. Corp. Hendryx, of the 42d Ohio, reached the face of the work on the left and continued excavations until ordered to desist, returning with the loss of one man, while the lieutenant threw up an earth-work across the road on a line with and near Fort Beaureguard. June 1st, this company was entrusted with running the saps in front of the 13th Army Corps; reached a point within 15 feet of the fort on the 3d of July. July 4th, Vicksburg fell. On the 5th this company marched to Jackson, Miss., under Lieut McIllvain, of the 120th Ohio, and returned August 1st. August 5th, pioneer corps was disbanded and this company was ordered with the 13th Army Corps to New Orleans, La., arriving on the 27th. From this date it engaged as mechanics, making water wagons and canvas boats, under command of Maj. Gen. E. O. C. Ord, up to the 5th of October, when it marched with the advance of the 13th Army Corps to Vermillion Bayou, arriving on the 11th. On the 1st of November it returned to New Orleans with the 13th Army Corps. On the 15th it embarked on transports for Brazos Santiago, Texas, arriving on the 20th. On the 21st was ordered for Aransas Pass, debarking on St. Joseph Island. On November 22d, the army marched up the coast, Maj. Gen. Washburn commanding; reached Cedar Bayou, November 24th. On November 25th, constructed a flying bridge, 300 yards long, across Cedar Bayou, and the command crossed. On the 7th of December reached Pass Cavallo, Texas. Built hospitals, signal stations, warehouses, wharves, and did mechanical work generally up to April 19th, when we embarked with the 13th Army Corps for Alexandria, La., arriving on the 28th of April. Assisted in the construction of the "Great Dam across Red river." On the 13th of May, left Alexandria for New Orleans, arriving on the 6th of June. July 3d, reported to Engineer Department of the Gulf, and dividing the company, took charge of mechanical and steam saw-mill in Cypress Swamp up to November 17th, when the company was ordered to report to Louisville, Ky., its term of three years' service having expired. On November 23d embarked on transports for Louisville, Ky., arriving December 1, 1864. The company was finally mustered out January 22, 1865, at Louisville, Ky. It had participated in the following named battles and affairs in which loss was sustained: Mill Springs, Ky.; Cumberland Gap; retreat from Cumberland Gap; Chickasaw Bayou; Arkansas Post; Port Gibson; Champion Hills; Black River Bridge; siege of Vicksburg; Vermillion Bayou; Aransas Pass; Pass Cavallo; Alexandria, La.; Morksburg, La.; Yellow Bayou, La.

Frankfort Battalion.

Capts. Chas. Junot, Thos. R. Boyd; Lieuts. Jas. M. Simmonds, John H. Spruill, 100 men.

The service of these state troops is thus mentioned in the adjutant-general's report:

The Capital Guard Regiment, Kentucky State Troops, was raised under sanction of the War Department, dated July 11, 1863, and consisted of three battalions—one stationed in the neighborhood of Frankfort, one at or near Paducah, and one in the Sandy valley. The remainder of the state forces, except the Mercer County State Guards and Casey County State Guards, were raised under an act of Kentucky Legislature, approved January 26, 1864, entitled "An Act empowering the government to raise a force for the defense of the state."

The two State Guard companies mentioned were raised under the militia law of the state, and being ordered on duty, were assigned for service to the battalions with which they appear. All of these troops did valuable and efficient service to the state and the general government, as the history of the time would fully show. The Sandy valley battalion rendered most important service during the Saltville raid. The Frankfort battalion protected the capital from the frequent incursions of guerrilla forces. The Paducah battalion protected the southwestern portion of the state. Shortly after the muster-out of this battalion the gallant Capt. Thos. J. Gregory, Company A, was killed in action while leading a charge against a guerrilla force. The troops raised under act of January 26, 1864, were enlisted subsequent to the muster-out of the Capital Guard regiment, and were located as follows: The Three Forks battalion in the extreme southeastern portion of the state, with headquarters at Booneville.

The Hall's Gap battalion in the locality between Stanford and Hall's Gap; headquarters at Stanford.

The Green River battalion in the counties between the Ohio and Green rivers, with headquarters at Calhoun.

The Middle Green River battalion in the southern portion of the state, with headquarters at Rochester.

The South Cumberland battalion, also in the southern portion of the state, with headquarters at Burksville.

The 1st Ky. Cavalry in the central part of the state, with headquarters at Lebanon.

The Frankfort battalion was assigned to duty in guarding the Louisville and Lexington railroad, and the country adjacent thereto.

All of these battalions performed the most valuable service against the rebels and guerrillas under Morgan, Johnson, South, Lyon, Mundy, Gentry, Jesse, etc., and for some time freed the state from the incursions of these troops.

September 3, 1862, Gov. Robinson appointed Col. Wm. H. Wadsworth, of Maysville, to command the state forces in Mason county. Col. Wadsworth appointed on his staff Richard Apperson, Jr., Thos. M. Green and Sam W. Owens (Collins' Annals). In connection with the history of the 14th Ky. Cavalry this service of Col. Wadsworth is mentioned.

STATE MILITIA PROPER.

Besides the state troops proper, just mentioned, there were one hundred and sixty-two companies of Home Guards, State Guards and militia called into service, their organization being authorized by act of the legislature. These troops are enumerated in the adjutant-general's report. They can not be shown in detail in this work, but the following is a summary statement:

These State Troops Proper, State Guards, and Militia, sometimes called Home Guards, were called into the service by authority. They acted under the direction of the military board of the state. They were often found doing duty in connection with the regular military organizations, and were always responsible to the constituted authorities.

It is concerning these men that such historians as Shaler and Smith made the gratuitous and unjust charges of perpetrating outrages.

Many facts on this subject can be learned by a careful scrutiny of the "Annals of Kentucky," found in the first volume of Collin's history. That author gathered in these annals a great number of facts concerning the war period in Kentucky. In stating them his temper is shown by the derisive epithets and sneers he uses about the conduct of the Federal authorities generally, and his complete sympathy with the Southern cause is apparent on every page. Yet, when these annals are scrutinized, it is plain the facts they disclose speak far stronger against the enemies of the Union than the supporters of the Union. They show that the "guerrillas" were on the side of the Confederacy, and against everything that was Union. They show not less than fifty instances of "outrage" perpetrated by guerrillas, while only two are set down as the work of "Home Guards." They show that "guerrillas" and "rebels" burned twelve court houses, while only one was burned by the Federals, and that one from "carelessness." They show scores of wanton killings by "guerrillas," but none by "Home Guards."

They show that the military executions charged against Burbridge and others were on the ground of "retaliation" for murders perpetrated by guerrillas. If the facts of the case had been such as to justify the general reflections on the Home Guards, found in the general histories of Kentucky, it may be regarded as a certainty that Collins would have gleaned them and noted them in his annals. That they do not appear there, is strong proof that the general charges are unfounded.

Collins' "annals" mention several instances in which the Home Guards fought with credit. One of their battles was at Augusta, Ky., on the Ohio river, about twenty miles below Maysville. About three hundred and fifty of Morgan's cavalry fought one hundred and twenty-five Home Guards under Dr. Bradford. The latter fought from the houses, and the Confederates resorted to the torch, which compelled the Home Guards to surrender, but their assailants lost twenty-one killed and eighteen wounded, and the object of the raid was frustrated. (See Collins' Annals.) The official records show the additional facts that Col. Wilson, of the 44th Ohio, being at Maysville, hurried down to the relief of Dr. Bradford at Augusta. He was accompanied by Hon. W. H. Wadsworth, Col. Charles A. Marshall and Judge Bush, of Maysville, who led Home Guard companies. "More than half of my command," says Col. Wilson, in his report, "were citizens, but all marched and behaved like veteran troops." This force reached Augusta and drove off the Confederates while they were in the act of paroling the prisoners they had captured.

The services of the Home Guards, in co-operation with other troops, are favorably mentioned in the official reports of numerous generals—Nelson, Anderson, Boyle, Hobson, H. G. Wright, Green Clay Smith, George W. Morgan, D. W. Lindsey and many others. Among the Home Guard officers whose conduct was specially noted, were Col. Wm. H. Wadsworth, Col. Worthington, Maj. Bridgewater, Captains McClintock, Penn, Wilson, Arthur, Wright, Cochran, Pepper. Among the organizations which receive complimentary mention in the reports are the Louisville Dragoons and the Capital Guards.

Instead of unjust reflections being cast upon these various companies which materially aided in the protection of their state, they should receive in the histories of the war the mention they merited and received in the official reports, which show that they were reliable, trustworthy, courageous and useful soldiers in the cause of their state and country.

CONCLUSION.

This history of the Union Regiments of Kentucky is now completed. The accounts given present the main events in the career of each organization; without elaboration, however, and omitting many details which would have been interesting. If the services of a regiment were presented in full, with incidents of camp and march and battlefield, they would fill a volume. Therefore as such complete narratives would require a number of volumes, the purpose intended by this one volume would not be accomplished. Indeed if such extended accounts were published, there would be a natural desire to have the salient points digested and expressed more briefly. This is practically speaking what has now been done. Mention is made in the preface of the great publication known as the records of the war. The accounts given in this book have been gathered from these official records and are therefore based upon authority and are not exaggerated statements.

The roster of each regiment is copied from the adjutant-general's report, and is official.

The proportion of the Union voters in Kentucky, which entered the military service is noticeable. At the presidential election in 1860, 93,000 votes were cast for the three tickets which stood for the Union—Bell, Douglass and Lincoln, while 52,000 voted for Breckinridge, the Southern rights candidate. Again in May, 1861, 110,000 voted for the Union delegates to the Border State convention to be held that month at Frankfort, Ky. The remarkable spectacle is presented therefore, of more than two-thirds of these Union voters enlisting in the Union service.

Of these soldiers it may be said generally, that while serving their country they also obeyed the behests of their own state. The step they took was beset with difficulties, and much that was disagreeable. Yet in response to every call they promptly filled up the required quota. The enlistments were from all parts of Kentucky. The counties along the Tennessee line, and along the course of Green river, and through all the central portions of the state, were not behind those which bordered on the Ohio, and in the mountain region.

By the act of enlistment these Kentucky soldiers placed themselves under orders, and were responsible to the appointed commanders of the armies. If called to the front to do battle in connection with the great military organizations, there they were found. If required to guard long lines of communications they performed that duty. If ordered to police their own state to protect the national interests, they engaged in that service. The entire body of these defenders of the Union acted throughout under the orders of the constituted authorities, and were never found engaged in self appointed work, nor acting in partisan or independent bands. The records of their service as shown by the official reports, are singularly free from any conduct inviting criticism. Their bravery was conspicuous on hundreds of battlefields, and their readiness to perform every duty assigned to them was noticeable wherever they were employed.

When the war ended the survivors re-entered the avenues of peace, satisfied with the grand results, and willing to cast into oblivion all the bitterness and animosity engendered by four years of strife and bloodshed.

They had no hatred of their brethren of the Confederate cause when they took up arms, and they had none when they laid them down. On the contrary there was a natural sympathy for the people of the South, which had to be overcome in taking a stand against the dismemberment of our National Union. It may be truly and emphatically said that the defense of the Union was the inspiration of the Kentucky Unionists. Their expression was "Secession is a remedy for no evil." To them the calamity of a dismembered Union was too appalling to be permitted. They threw themselves into the ranks of its defenders, assured that it is only in national unity that this country can have peace and order, and accomplish its great destiny.

Notwithstanding the heroic service of the Kentucky Union regiments, they have received but scanty mention in the general histories of the state. As shown in the preface, they have had but little justice, and much injustice, done them.

It is hoped that this work, though it appears late—more than thirty years since the close of the war—will serve a useful purpose in leading to correct views concerning the position and conduct of the Kentucky Unionists, as well as prove interesting to the survivors and to the descendants of those who have passed away.

APPENDIX.

Colored Soldiers.

The enlistment of colored men in Kentucky was in organizations belonging directly to the United States government. They did not serve in any state organization, but were known as United States troops. In round numbers there were 14,000 of these enlistments in the state. As they were never in or connected with the Kentucky regiments, an account of them in no way belongs to this work, which is a history of the Union state organizations.

In regard to the use of negroes as soldiers the attitude of the Southern Confederacy was practically the same as that of the national government. This fact should not be forgotten whenever this subject is considered. The official records show that negroes were conscripted by the Confederacy in large numbers, for use in building fortifications, and as laborers and teamsters. All this character of work had to be performed, and in the Union armies it was done by the enlisted men. To the extent therefore that it was done in the Confederate armies by conscripted negroes, leaving the white soldiers free to fight, this element must be counted as part of the military strength of the South.

But the Confederacy went further. It adopted the policy of putting the negroes in the army as soldiers. This has not been noticed in many histories of the war, but it is none the less a fact. Not only was that policy advocated by Jefferson Davis, and Gen. Robert E. Lee, and many others in the highest positions, it was also favored by the Confederate House of Representatives and the Confederate Senate, and actually became a law, too late however, to be of any practical value to the Southern cause.

Abundant authority can be cited for this statement, but none other is necessary when the whole matter is stated in full in Jefferson Davis' book, entitled "The Rise and Fall of the Confederate Government." In the first volume, pages 515 to 519, the whole story is told.

Mr. Davis mentions the act of Congress which authorizes the employment of slaves for fatigue duty, and says this act "brought forward the question of the employment of negroes as soldiers in the army, which was warmly advocated by some and as ardently opposed by others." He then makes an extended quotation from his message on the subject opposing the policy. He then says:

Subsequent events advanced my views from a prospective to a present need for the enrollment of negroes to take their place in the ranks. Strenuously I argued the question with members of Congress who called to confer with me. To a member of the Senate (the House in which we most needed a vote) I stated as I had done to many others, the fact of having led negroes against a lawless band of white men, and the assurance which the experiment gave me, that they might under proper conditions be relied on in battle, and finally used to him the expression which I believe I can repeat exactly, "If the Confederacy falls there should be written on its tomb-stone, 'died of a theory'." Gen. Lee was brought before a committee to state his opinion as to the probable efficiency of negroes as soldiers, and disappointed the probable expectation by his unqualified advocacy of the proposed measure. After much discussion in Congress, a bill authorizing the president to ask for and accept from their owners such number of able-bodied negroes as he might deem expedient, subsequently passed the House, but was lost in the Senate by one vote. The senators of Virginia opposed the measure so strongly that only legislative instruction could secure their support of it. The legislature did so instruct them, and they voted for it. Finally, the bill passed with an amendment providing that not more than twenty-five per cent of the male slaves between the ages of 18 and 45 should be called out. But the passage of the act had been delayed so long that the opportunity was lost. There did not remain time enough to obtain any result from its provisions.

This quotation from the History of the Southern Confederacy by its president, Jefferson Davis, establishes the truth of the statement that the attitude of the Confederacy to the policy of using negroes as soldiers in the armies was the same as that of the national government.

INDEX.

This index contains the names of all the commissioned officers from Kentucky, including general and staff, and regimental officers. The list is valuable, not only as an index to this work, but as containing in alphabetical order this notable collection of names. It is made up from the rosters of the regiments and other data found in the Adjutant-General's Report, and is in the main complete and correct. It could be corrected, perhaps, in a few instances by examining the manuscript rolls which were made from time to time during the career of each regiment, but such examination is not praticable at this time, and the work of the adjutant-general has been accepted without alteration. Only a few names other than officers occur in the index.
